PROVO, UTAH

“What do we want with this vast worthless area; this region of savages and wild beasts, of deserts, of shifting sands and whirlwinds of dust, of cactus and prairie dogs? To what use could we ever hope to put these great deserts, or those endless mountain ranges, impenetrable, and covered to their very base with eternal snow? What can we ever hope to do with the western coast, a coast of 3,000 miles, rock-bound, cheerless, uninviting, and not a harbor on it? Mr. President, I will never vote one cent from the public treasury to place the Pacific Coast one inch nearer to Boston than it now is.”
(Daniel Webster, in U. S. Senate.)

PREFACE.

THIS history is issued under the direction of the Lehi Pioneer Committee, consisting of William S. Evans, Andrew Fjeld, George N. Child, Martin B. Bushman, and Andrew B. Anderson. The securing of necessary facts for the Pioneer Monument at its erection in 1908 brought to light so much valuable historical matter that the committee determined to give it permanent book form. This proposal was approved by the people of the city in a public meeting, and work was immediately started on the project; it has continued uninterruptedly since.

The material for the volume has been gathered from many sources. James Kirkham, while acting as tithing clerk, Frank Butt, as clerk of the Lehi Second Ward (ecclesiastical), W. Karl Hopkins, Principal of the Lehi High School, and Ephraim J. Child, have searched out a store of useful information. But most of the data has been gathered by the Pioneer Committee itself by personal conversation and wide-reaching correspondence. In this work, special credit must be accorded Bishop Andrew Fjeld, who for many months has devoted a large part of his time to this history.

While most of the city records are in fairly good condition, some periods are almost wholly lacking, and it was only with extreme difficulty that the missing facts could be ascertained. The lack of records concerning the settlement of the city is more than compensated in completeness and accuracy by the practical unanimity of testimony from the many participants consulted.

Although one of the chief aims in the writing of this history has been to make it absolutely as accurate as possible, it is unbelievable that some mistakes of time, place, or identity have not crept in. If so, they are wholly unintentional.

Special thanks must be given to William Fotheringham, Henry McConnell, and Joel W. White, who, upon invitation of the committee, made special trips to Lehi from Beaver, Cedar City, and Idaho respectively, to furnish information; Mrs. David Clark; Jacob and Edward Cox; Bishop Thomas R. Cutler, who went over Chapter XVII, and supplied many necessary facts concerning it; Professor Levi Edgar Young, of the University of Utah, who has read a number of the chapters and offered many helpful suggestions; John Woodhouse and James Harwood, whose interesting accounts constitute a large part of whatever merit the book possesses; and a score of others who have contributed to the success of the undertaking.

The writer became connected with the history in the summer of 1912, while performing some research work for the department of history of the University of Utah. Engaged at that time by the Pioneer Committee to write the book, he has worked on it until the present. He leaves it completed now, believing that the volume is a fitting means of perpetuating the noble deeds of the pioneers, and that the history of Lehi is a valuable contribution to the history of the Commonwealth of which it forms a part.

HISTORY OF LEHI.

CHAPTER I.

Foreword.

THE history of Lehi is almost the history of Utah in miniature. The same type of people founded the city; the same trend and kind of growth is evident; the same struggles and hardships were common to both; the same events left their effects on both; the same influences of uplift and betterment were at work—Lehi is but a small-scale reproduction of Utah.

As a type of Utah town, Lehi is an exceptionally good one; because its history began so early. Hence it expresses in true terms that which was common to all the contemporary history of the Commonwealth. Here was no need to hide anything. Unlike Salt Lake City, the founders of Lehi were not under critical and unfriendly observation, so the people were at liberty to live out their ideals as they desired. Their subsequent record bespeaks the high character of those ideals.

Furthermore, Lehi is not only a typical Utah town, but an excellent type of the Anglo-Saxon village community as well. In their every step in government, the people of the little community have expressed those civic ideas common to the race. Like their Teutonic and New England forefathers, they inherently built up a type of government which had as its chief characteristic the independence of the local unit. The town meeting was the universal way of transacting community business, just as it was with the Puritans—whose descendants, indeed, these pioneers were. Their race expressed itself; the Anglo-Saxon blood was supreme. Their governments, whether municipal, county, or state, were always characterized by their stability and democracy.

To many, this fact may not seem worthy of mention. Yet a mere glance at the history of the West at the time will show that it is sufficiently remarkable. Civilization had as yet not become firmly planted west of the Missouri. Indeed, the frontier settlements along that river were famous for their lawlessness and wildness. For many years afterwards, in fact, there could be found very few firmly established governments of any kind in the West. Yet these pioneers transplanted bodily the law and order to which they had formerly been accustomed, and they had no more than found a permanent resting place in the mountains than they established a government whose superior in strength and equality of rights could not be found in America.

That ecclesiastical and civic governments very much overlapped at first there is no denying. Nor need this occasion any great wonder. The pioneers had come west for a religious ideal—their religion was their life; it permeated all their activities and necessarily colored them. Yet there is no doubt that just such a bond was needed to hold together these people in the foundation of a commonwealth. Surely the boundless wealth lying in the mountains, the fortunes in hunting and trapping, were not the goals which enticed the pioneers towards the Rockies. Their every action proclaims their migration to be only the working out of the desire for freedom of conscience. Yet if church and state were intermixed in Utah, Lehi was perhaps more free from such a condition than some other towns, because of the exceptionally early establishment of her municipal government.

The character of Lehi's founders is exemplified in the steady, consistent growth of the city as a result of their foundations. It was no mushroom mining camp they built, nor yet a transient trading post; it was a home. Permanency was the keynote of their pioneer life. And that their work was not in vain the flourishing city of today bears unmistakable witness.

CHAPTER II.

Explorations in and Around Lehi.

NATIVE INDIANS.

JUST what Indian tribes have resided on the north end of Utah Lake, how long they have remained there, what constituted their customs and manner of living, is to history unknown. Definite is, however, that this part of Utah Valley has long been a haunt of the dusky redmen, because numerous arrow heads, stone mills, and other weapons and utensils have been excavated near the springs and other meeting places of the savages. On entering the valley, white men found small bands from the neighboring Utah tribes, who eked out a meager existence from fishing in the lake and raising small quantities of Indian corn. Like their tribesmen, they were nomads and wandered from place to place as their food supply diminished or was exhausted.

FRANCISCAN FRIARS.

The actual settlers of Lehi were not the first white men to view the site of the future city by almost a century. In July, 1776, two Franciscan monks from New Mexico, Francisco Antanasio Dominguez and Silvester Velez de Escalante, determined to find, if possible, a short route from Santa Fe to California, and accordingly set out for the northwest. Their wanderings—which took them through western Colorado and eastern Utah—finally brought them down the Provo River into the Utah Valley, and they were the first white men to behold the beautiful lake which lies nestling there. This was probably in the early part of September. They christened the Jordan the Santa Ana, and found it and the other streams in the vicinity, as well as the lake, to be teeming with fish. The Indians, the Spaniards tell us, lived in willow huts and subsisted from hunting and fishing, the former because plenty of bear, deer, buffalo, jackrabbits, and wild fowl were found in the neighborhood. After stopping a short time in the inviting valley, the friars resumed their journey late in September, and passing along the Sevier River reached New Mexico.

PROVOST.

As to who the next white men were to visit the site of Lehi, nothing can be definitely ascertained. It is stated that a trapper named Provost (sometimes spelled Proveau) visited the north end of the valley, and it is presumed that Provo is named after him. His visit is supposed to have been in 1820, but this fact cannot be verified. Undoubtedly, however, some of the numerous trappers and hunters who were roaming the West in the early '20's for the Hudson Bay Company and the North American Fur Company visited the lake and hunted along its shores.

ASHLEY.

One such person, William N. Ashley of St. Louis, led, in 1825, a company of considerable size to the West and founded Fort Ashley on the lake. From the fort, this body of water was long known as Lake Ashley. It is not unreasonable to believe, also, that some of the many immigrants, missionaries, and adventurers, who passed through Utah on their way west between 1830 and 1845, stopped temporarily in Utah Valley, lured by the pleasant scenery and smiling beauty of the lake. Known among these, however, is scarcely any other than John C. Fremont, the intrepid explorer and subsequent presidential candidate.

FIRST OF UTAH PIONEERS.

On July 27th, 1847, just three days after the arrival of the first company of pioneers, Orson Pratt, while out with an exploring party in the southern end of Salt Lake Valley, climbed a high range of hills and obtained the first glimpse of Utah Lake. The honor of being the first to explore it fell to other hands. On August 5, Jesse C. Little returned from an exploring expedition in Utah Valley, and reported that the soil there was exceptionally well adapted for cultivation.

FIRST COLONY ON LAKE.

The pioneers were not slow to take advantage of this favorable report. As early as 1849, a party under the leadership of John S. Higbee founded a colony and built a fort on the present site of Provo. Continual altercations with the Indians, however, made its early existence a difficult one.

STANSBURY PARTY.

It was in this same year that the first survey—incomplete as it must have been—was made of Utah Lake. This work was under the direction of Captain Howard Stansbury, of the United States Army, who proved to be a loyal and useful friend to the struggling colonists.

VISITS OF LATER LEHI RESIDENTS.

Before any attempt had been made to establish a colony on the site of Lehi, two of the city's later residents passed through the place. Neither knew at the time that they should later become citizens of the community to be founded there. The first of these was Hyland D. Wilcox. A boy of thirteen then, he had crossed the plains in 1849 in company with Ephraim Brown, who settled in Draper after his arrival. It was as companion to this man that Wilcox came into the north end of Utah Valley, some time between July fifteenth and twentieth of the same year, in search of grazing land for their cattle. On Dry Creek they encountered a camp of Indians whose none too cordial welcome caused Brown to decide that other places would be more suitable for pasturage, so they returned to Draper.

HYLAND D. WILCOX.

JOHN JACOBS.

Lehi on his way to California. Leaving Illinois May 18, and crossing the plains in a company under charge of Ezra T. Benson, he arrived in Salt Lake, October 31. About one week later he joined a company bound for California. They passed Dry Creek about November 10, and camped over night on a spring southeast of the present city, proceeding immediately on their way. Two years later, Jacobs purchased a lot in Evansville, and took up his permanent residence upon it in the spring of 1852.

FIRST PIONEER BOATMANSHIP.

To Parley P. Pratt must be accredited the honor of being the first pioneer to navigate the waters of the lake, according to the following statement from his journal (p. 402):

“Some time in December (1847), having finished sowing wheat and rye, I started, in company with a Brother Higby and others, for Utah Lake with a boat and fish net. We traveled some thirty miles with our boat, etc., on an ox wagon, while some of us rode on horseback. This distance brought us to the foot of Utah Lake, a beautiful sheet of fresh water, some thirty-six miles long by fifteen broad. Here we launched our boat and tried our net; being probably the first boat and net ever used on this sheet of water in modern times." [Pratt was probably wrong in this statement, as can be readily seen from the list of trappers and explorers who preceded him.]

"We sailed up and down the lake shore on its western side for many miles, but had only poor success in fishing. We, however, caught a few samples of mountain trout and other fish."

GENERAL CHARACTER OF THESE EXPLORATIONS.

All these stops on Utah Lake were only temporary. Spanish monk, American trapper, explorer, and adventurer alike were drawn to its shores only for gain or adventure. To make a permanent colony was far from being their aim. It remained for the Mormon pioneers to send out the expedition which resulted in the city of Lehi.

CHAPTER III.

Permanent Foundations.

1850-1851

WHEN the Mormons entered Utah, in 1847, it was their intention to remain permanently. The desire for gold and the search for adventure were not the phantoms which lured them from their homes in Illinois to an unknown land in the West. Like the

BRIGHAM YOUNG.

Pilgrims of old, they hoped in a new country to find liberty—civic and religious—and the opportunity of carrying out their ideals and performing their destiny free from the molestations of persecution and bigotry. Their memorable pilgrimage across the plains—a march almost without parallel in the annals of history—brought them at last to their mountain home. Under the leadership of Brigham Young—long regarded by both Utahn and stranger as one of the greatest pioneers of history—they immediately proceeded to establish a permanent abiding place, and began the heart-breaking task of wresting a livelihood from the desert waste which they found.

One of the first moves undertaken by the Mormon authorities was to explore new land for their co-religionists who should come later. Parties were sent out into all adjacent parts of the Territory to find suitable sites for colonization. In this way Brigham Young became thoroughly acquainted with the country and was able to give pertinent advice to newcomers who desired a place to settle. Among other places such a party of home-seekers entered Utah Valley in 1850.

THE PETERSON PARTY.

CANUTE PETERSON.

Having heard favorable reports in regard to the land around American Fork Creek, a party composed of Canute Peterson, David Savage, Charles Hopkins, Henry Royle, William S. Empey, William Wadsworth, and Surveyor Lemmon, set out on an exploring expedition to Utah Valley in July, 1850. They proceeded immediately to this little stream, but were surprised to find, on their arrival, that it was already pre-empted by Washburn Chipman, Arza

Adams and others who laid claim to all the land and water in the vicinity.

A disagreement arising between the two parties the next morning, Peterson and his followers immediately left and stopped at another stream about three miles west, which, on account of the difficulty with which they found sufficient water for their horses, they named Dry Creek, an appellation much more truthful than poetic. After camping approximately on the site of the present City Park, they spent the remainder of the day in exploring the surrounding country, going as far south as Utah Lake and as far west as the Jordan River.

DAVID SAVAGE.

They found the valley to be covered with sage brush, intermingled here and there with a sprinkling of greasewood and bunchgrass and colored occasionally with a patch of sunflowers or Indian paint brushes. A strip of meadowgrass, cane brakes, rushes and flags formed an emerald border around the lake. A spring was also discovered about three-fourths of a mile north of the lake, and one mile east of the river, which was christened Sulphur Springs on account of the peculiar taste of the water. This spring later became the center around which the first settlers located. In 1853 it came into the possession of William Snow, and was henceforth known as Snow's Spring. Recently it has become clogged with weeds and undergrowth, and the water has dwindled to a mere seepage.

After their investigation of the country, the party, being favorably impressed with the land and its possibilities, surveyed and located an extensive tract and determined to return and settle permanently.

As to who was the first person actually to set up a permanent home on the site of Lehi, there exists a difference of opinion. There is a woeful lack of records, the principal actors in these stirring events have long since passed to the Great Beyond, and in the minds of the few survivors a mistiness beclouds the dates and events which make up this eventful history. In all the lack of information and amid all the seeming disagreement as to priority, however, a difference of only one month is found in the time of arrival of the first families.

WHITE AND THOMAS.

On the 5th of September, 1850, a band of immigrants who had crossed the plains in Captain Aaron Johnson's company, arrived at the home of David Savage in Salt Lake City. Among this number was Joel W. White, a brother-in-law of Savage. Weary and footsore from their long journey, their first thought was of a resting place where they could build a home. Savage urged White and his friends to go to Utah Valley, offering part of the land he had taken up as an inducement. The proposal was gladly accepted, and a week after the close of the semi-annual conference, held this year on the 5th of September, found the little company on its way south.

Savage directed White to proceed to Sulphur Springs, considering that the best place to obtain water for domestic use.

JOEL W. WHITE AND WIFE.

He promised to follow the next day and overtake the party if it should lose its way. Such a precaution was unnecessary, however, because White and his companions had little trouble in finding the springs, where they immediately pitched camp. In this company were the families of Joel William White, John Griggs White, Claiborne Thomas, and Elizabeth T. Moorehead. The next day, David Savage and two hired men arrived, and they were followed a few days later by the family of Samuel D. White, brother of Joel W. and son of John G. White.*

*William S. Riggs maintains that David Savage, himself and a young man named Hager were the first arrivals at the springs, having passed White's company at Little Cottonwood. The three later returned to Salt Lake for Savage's family. He places the order of arrival as follows: Savage, White, Clark, Cox.

ROYLE AND CLARK.

David Clark and family arrived in Salt Lake City August 26, 1850, having crossed the plains with a company of gold diggers on their way to California. While in the city the Clarks were entertained at the home of his brother-in-law, Henry Royle, who finally persuaded them to accompany him to Dry Creek. After about two weeks' rest for the wearied travelers, the two families began their southward journey with Royle's ox team and the running gear of a wagon. They arrived in the vicinity of Dry Creek, September 10, 1850. Probably because of lack of knowledge of the country, they did not go directly to Sulphur Springs, but camped for the time further east on the Ira Willes Spring.

DAVID CLARK.

This fact may account for the conflicting statements as to antecedence of arrival, for Joel W. White maintains that his company was the first to camp at Sulphur Springs, while Mrs. David Clark insists that she was the only woman in the vicinity for some time after her arrival. Royle and Clark found the ground around the Willes Spring too marshy, so they moved their camp to the drier soil surrounding Sulphur Springs.

DANIEL COX.

Having arrived in Salt Lake City some time between the first and fifth of September, 1850, after crossing the plains in Capt. Wall's company, Daniel Cox happened to meet Brigham Young on the street one day and asked where he should make his home. After a moment's reflection, President Young replied: "Brother Cox, go south and prosper with the Saints in Utah Valley."

With these general directions in mind, Cox and his family were soon on their way. Having reached the Point of the Mountain, they encountered a number of men who advised them to settle on Dry Creek. After crossing the Point—an extremely hazardous undertaking at that time, because the way led up through a ravine, over the mountain, and down a hollow on the other side, instead of around the Point as at present—Cox followed the trail he found there, and, passing about where the State Road now runs, reached Dry Creek, where he pitched camp on the east bank.

An amusing anecdote is told about Cox's first supper. To the south of the camp lay Utah Lake, shimmering and gleaming in the rays of the setting sun. To Cox it appeared very near, and he determined to get some water from it while supper was being prepared. Taking a bucket, he started on his errand. After walking for some time he noticed that the water appeared no nearer than at first, and so he gave up, filled his bucket from a spring he had chanced to find, and reached camp after dark, much chagrined, the family being considerably worried in the meanwhile.

About the third day after their arrival on Dry Creek, they discerned several teams and wagons coming down the trail from the Point of the Mountain, but instead of continuing to the creek, they turned south towards the lake. Cox decided to follow them, and accordingly broke camp, caught the others and with them camped on Sulphur Springs. Here again may possibly be a disagreement, for the Cox brothers, Edward and Jacob, state that this company was the first to camp on Sulphur Springs, but who the other families were they cannot now recall.

CHARLES HOPKINS.

Before the end of November, 1850, Charles Hopkins and Israel Evans, together with their families, and William Fotheringham, with his aged father and mother, had arrived at the colony. They were followed by Thomas Karren and family, who had crossed the mountains from Salt Lake Valley near the present site of Alpine, and had followed the creek down to Sulphur Springs. Jehial McConnell and family were the last to arrive, and they completed the little colony which spent the winter of 1850-1851 at the spring by the lake.

BUILDING OPERATIONS.

The first problem for these sturdy pioneers to settle was the erection of some kind of dwelling that would protect them from the inclemency of the rapidly approaching winter as well as from the possible incursions of the red men. Immediately, therefore, they began felling the native cottonwood trees which were to be found some miles up the creek, trimming them into logs, and hauling them to the spring. Meantime the wagon boxes were put on the ground and used for temporary quarters.

Those early cabins consisted of only one or two rooms, according to the size of the family—surely none too ample quarters. The walls were approximately seven feet high; the roof a leaky, inadequate contrivance of willows and dirt, gabled at each end. The openings between the logs were "chinked" with pieces of wood and daubed with mud. A sod fireplace in one corner of the room served the varied purposes of cooking, furnishing heat and providing light. Doors were made for some of the cabins from the wagon boxes, while for others quilts served the same purpose. By those who had it, "factory" was tacked over the window openings, which served the double purpose of letting in the light and keeping out the cold, although it necessarily performed both these functions imperfectly.

THE FIRST SAW.

It was not long until William Fotheringham and Thomas Karren made shift to provide a saw pit in a nearby gully. Here, with a whip saw and with Karren as top sawyer and Fotheringham underneath, lumber was sawed to finish some of the cabins. The necessary logs were hauled from Alpine Canyon. Of these homes, thus difficultly erected, Joel W. White says:

"Of logs we built our houses,
Of shakies made the doors,
Of sod we built the chimneys,
Dirt we had for floors."

PIONEER FURNITURE.

The furniture of those early days lacked most of the beauty and convenience of modern furniture, and possessed, indeed, only little of its utility. All of it was cumbersome and clumsy, being made from the materials at hand, except in those rare instances where a chair or bed had been brought from the Missouri River. Three-legged stools took the place of the former, while a frame of poles in one corner of the room sufficed for the latter. The chief cooking utensils were an iron pot to hang over the fire, a frying pan, and a bake kettle.

With such equipment were the pioneer mothers compelled to keep house. That their problem was a difficult one needs no further proof than a mere statement of the facts. Nor was the providing of food on the part of the men at all less difficult. With the exception of that which they obtained from the chase and from the settlers in Salt Lake Valley, their food had almost entirely been brought from the Missouri frontier by means of slow-moving prairie schooners. Here was a case of ingenuity triumphing over environment, or starvation.

CLAIBORNE THOMAS AND WIFE.

And right nobly did these men and women meet the situation, and in spite of hardships and obstacles, succeeded in obtaining a livelihood.

THE FIRST BABY.

The Cox cabin was no more than well begun when, on November 5, 1850, a baby girl was born to Mrs. Cox. She was named Azubia Deseret, and was the first white child to see the light of day on Dry Creek. Her birth in a wagon box did not prevent her from growing into a rugged, healthy girl.*

THE FIRST FORT:

When the erection of the cabins began, it was planned to build them end to end in the form of a fort, with the spring in the center; but this design was never carried out, because of the small number of the settlers. Only the north side was completed with eight houses, together with four on the east and three on the west, the south side being entirely open.

The location of the various families, commencing with the south cabin on the east side, and going north to the north east corner, thence west along the north side to the north-east corner, thence south on the west side, was as follows:

First cabin—occupied by Samuel D. White; wife; son Orson; and two daughters, Lucy (Mrs. William Flake), and Mary (Mrs. A. Milton Musser).

Second cabin—occupied by David Savage; wife, Marv A. White; daughter, Amanda P. (Cook); and two hired men, William S. Riggs and George Hager. The latter was a miner who went to California during the winter.

Third cabin—occupied by John Griggs White and wife, Lucy Baley, who were the aged parents of Charles D. White, Joel W. White, and Mrs. David Savage.

Fourth cabin—occupied by Joel William White; wife, Frances Ann Thomas; and Daniel C. Thomas, the young brother of Mrs. Joel W. White. This was the last cabin on the east side.

Fifth cabin—the home of Claiborne Thomas; wife Jane, and infant daughter.

Sixth cabin—occupied by a widowed sister of Claiborne Thomas, Elizabeth T. Moorehead, with two children, Preston and Ann.

Eighth cabin—home of Thomas Karren; wife; and six children, namely: John, Sylvia (Mrs. Lorenzo H. Hatch), Thomas, Hyrum, Charles, and Mary (Mrs. Hyrum Bennion).

Tenth cabin—home of Charles Hopkins; wife; and step-son, William Van Dyke.

Eleventh cabin—occupied by Israel Evans; wife, Matilda Thomas; and infant daughter Abigail (Mrs. Benjamin S. Lott).

Twelfth cabin—home of Daniel Cox; wife, Lucy Smith; and three sons by a former marriage, Edward, age 15, Jacob, age 13, and Joseph. This was the last house on the north side of the fort.

Thirteenth cabin—occupied by Jehial McConnell; wife; and three sons, Henry, George, and William.

This made a total of fifty-two souls, classified as follows: fifteen men, thirteen women, fifteen boys, and nine girls. Three of the girls and two of the boys were babies.

Henry Royle had a tree fall on him and break his collar bone and was taken to Salt Lake City, where he remained during the winter. He is, therefore, not included in this enumeration.

Two other cabins had been started on the west side, but they were never finished, because of a subsequent move to other ground.

THE FIRST WINTER.

When the log cabins had been finished and the families made as comfortable as possible under the circumstances, quarters for the animals were provided, and a quantity of grass was cut for hay. Those first to arrive were able to put up the hay in good condition, but the others found the grass frozen and unfit for this purpose. Fortunately for the infant colony, the first winter, while quite cold, was open, and this made it possible for the stock to run at large until spring.

MRS. ISRAEL EVANS.

In this work of providing fodder, only the most primitive tools were used by the pioneers. For mowing grass, a scythe and snath were employed, and often that most ancient of harvesting instruments, the sickle. The chief tool, however, was the ax, in the use of which most of the men were experts.

For animal help, the settlers depended almost solely upon oxen. A few pioneers were fortunate enough to possess horses, and frequently cows were hitched to the wagons. But practically all of the team work—plowing, logging, road-making, and traveling—was performed with the patient oxen, yoked to the wagon and guided only by the “Gee” and “Haw” of the driver.

JOHN RYAN.

The little colony at Sulphur Springs had at least one visitor during the winter. He was John Ryan who had become involved with the Indians in Skull Valley and been chased by them to the east end of Cedar Valley, where he checked their pursuit by killing two of them. Proceeding to the Jordan, he crossed and stopped at the fort. Shortly afterwards, Daniel Cox made a raft to ferry his things across the river.

HUNTING AND FISHING.

The construction of this raft for Ryan seems to have started Cox into other affairs of navigation, for a short time later he hollowed a tree trunk for a canoe, which he used on his hunting and fishing trips on the river and lake. He also improvised a sort of gill net to catch fish in the river. Cox was easily the principal Nimrod in the camp, and frequently shared his ducks, geese, or fish with his fellows.

That the others were also engaged in this kind of activity can be seen from the fact that Claiborne Thomas and some of the women succeeded, late in the winter, in making a hundred-foot seine out of twine purchased in Salt Lake City, and provided it with both a lead line and cork line. Claiborne Thomas also purchased a skiff for use on the lake, and sent Joel W.

MRS. DAVID SAVAGE.

White to haul it from Salt Lake City. On this trip the latter found a number of men building a road around the Point of the Mountain. He was, therefore, the first member of the settlement to pass over the new highway. With this equipment, the colonists succeeded in catching sufficient fish to satisfy their needs. Later the supply exceeded the demand, and the fish were sold in the surrounding settlements, often as far as Tooele. Thus arose Lehi's first commercial enterprise.

AN AVERTED ACCIDENT.

That so much hunting and fishing could be carried on without accident was marvelous; indeed, there came nearly being a serious mishap early in the winter. One day Claiborne Thomas noticed a flock of geese flying over the fort. Rushing into the cabin after his gun, he accidentally discharged it as he came out of the door. The shot went into David Clark's wagon, which stood near by, for Clark's cabin was not yet finished. Terribly frightened, Thomas hurried to the wagon, and, raising the cover, was relieved to find Mrs. Clark seated in the other end quietly combing her hair.

THE FIRST DEATH.

In the month of February, John G. White, after a life full of activity, devotion, and faith, passed to the Great Settlement beyond. David Savage, who was a carpenter, and owned a set of tools, made a respectable coffin from a wagon box, and Father White was interred. His grave is in an old burial ground situated a little west of Dry Creek, and north of the State Road* Thus occurred the first death on Dry Creek.

THE WINTER SAFELY THROUGH.

Despite all their difficulties, the inmates of the little fort passed safely through the first winter. True it is that many of them were entirely without shoes, and the clothing of all was woefully patched. But good health was theirs, and they enjoyed, in some measure at least, what they had left the East to find—freedom and a home. It was only natural, there-various times throughout the winter, under the direction of David Savage and Charles Hopkins.

THE NUCLEUS OF THE FUTURE CITY.

Thus with the advent of a few families and their camp around a spring, the growth of one of Utah's chief cities began. Such a development as has actually taken place was undoubtedly far from the minds of those hardy founders. But they built well, and upon their foundation has the superstructure of Lehi's growth and prosperity been placed.*

*Not all the inhabitants of the fort remained permanently in Lehi. Some of them moved to other parts of the State and assisted in pioneer work there. It is a notable fact that a large number of these held prominent and responsible positions in public service. This is equally true of their children. The winter at Snow Springs proved to be an excellent school.

CHAPTER IV.

The Beginning of Community Life.

OTHER LOCATIONS THAN SULPHUR SPRINGS.

THE spring of 1851 witnessed the arrival of various families and parties to settle in the vicinity of Sulphur Springs. Some of them, in fact, had already reached Dry Cheek in the late autumn of the preceding year. But these new arrivals did not join the little colony in the fort; they remained outside wherever a water supply suitable for domestic use could be found.

PETER SHIRTS.

In the fall of 1850, Peter Shirts had found a spring east of the fort, near the lake, and spent the winter there.* Abraham Losee and his family, who arrived some time later, selected a place a short distance north of Shirts', and dug a well to procure water, which was undoubtedly the first well in this region.

THE LOTT SETTLEMENT.

The spring of 1851 saw an increase to this little group near the lake. The first arrival was a widow, Mrs. Pamela Lott, mother of Mrs. Losee. She was soon followed by her son, John, her son-in-law, John R. Murdock, and Orrace Murdock, who, with their families, settled near the home of Shirts. This little group became known as the Lott Settlement, and was increased soon afterwards by the arrival of Isaac Losee and Ira J. Willes, the latter, however, remaining at Stink Weed Spring. In addition, other families had stopped at various springs in the neighborhood.

EVANSVILLE.

On February 15, 1851, there arrived on Dry Creek a man who was destined to play the leading part in the growth of the community for many years.

ABRAHAM LOSEE.

This man was David Evans. He had previously been ordained a bishop in Nauvoo by Joseph Smith, and had now been sent by Brigham Young to preside over the Saints of Dry Creek. Bishop Evans was a typical pioneer. Possessing the same rugged qualities which distinguished his chief, President Young, he was eminently fitted to direct the work of founding a community. Devoted to his Church, honest, upright, but determined and aggressive, and withal characterized by that rare gift of leadership which, above everything else, was imperative for a pioneer commander, he knew how to direct the colonists to obtain the best results. In his dealings with his fellows he was plain and outspoken, but always just and fair. Altogether, Bishop Evans was precisely the kind of man needed to meet the situation.

With his family, Evans made his home on Dry Creek with some of the people who had moved up from Sulphur Springs. His land was a tract west of the creek and just north of the present City Park. This place was called Evansville in honor of the bishop, and being on higher ground, with good water available by digging wells, it soon became the favorite locality for the home-seeker.

MRS. PAMELIA LOTT

During the early spring months, all the families at Sulphur Springs moved up to Evansville. Daniel Cox again took up the land where he had first camped on entering the valley. The Fotheringhams and Karrens, with the families of Henry Royle and Canute Peterson, chose land on the creek a little south of the others, their places being due west of the end of Main Street as it is now. Most of the families who arrived in 1851 settled on the creek between these two points, although some joined the Lott Settlement in the field.

THE DRY CREEK WARD.

Shortly after the arrival of Bishop Evans, Apostle George A. Smith visited the little colony and organized the Dry Creek Ward of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. David Evans was appointed bishop, with Charles Hopkins and David Savage as counselors and Jehial McConnell as ward clerk. This was the first organization of any kind to be effected, and with it a coherency and direction was given to the growth of the settlement impossible heretofore.

IRA J. WILLES.

THE FIRST PLANTING.

In the spring of 1851, the first crops, consisting of wheat, corn, potatoes, squash, and a few vegetables were planted. The farm implements were both crude and scarce. William Fotheringham relates that he had the point, share, and land side of a plow, and being a ship carpenter by trade, and hence expert in the use of the foot adze, he made a mold board from a gnarled piece of cottonwood, and with a log from the same kind of wood for a beam, managed to do fairly good plowing.

THE FIRST TROUBLE WITH THE INDIANS.

When the wheat was about six inches high, the first trouble with the Indians occurred. The redmen insisted on turning their ponies loose in the growing fields, maintaining that the grass and water were theirs, while only the land and wood belonged to the whites.

JOHN FOTHERINGHAM.
CHARLOTTE FOTHERINGHAM.

About this time three Indians came up the creek one day where the Karren, Fotheringham, Royle, and Peterson families were living. They appeared to be in an ugly mood and, emboldened by the fact that all the men were away at work, they took great delight in frightening the women and children. Finally Charlotte Fotheringham, an old Scotch lady, seized a hatchet and, shaking it threateningly in the face of one of the braves, she berated him right soundly in her good old mother tongue. This so surprised and amused the Indians that they withdrew, after entering a rebuttal in the Ute language.

THE AMERICAN FORK DITCH.

As the water in Dry Creek could not be relied upon to mature the crops, it was imperative that late irrigation water be procured. As the only supply available was the stream in American Fork Canyon, the prodigious undertaking of digging a ditch seven miles long from the mouth of the canyon to Lehi was begun under the initiative and direction of Bishop Evans.

Early in May, Charles Hopkins and Henry McConnell were sent to the mouth of the canyon to cut and haul logs for the purpose of constructing a dam which should divert part of the water into the proposed ditch. The main company arrived the next day and work was immediately begun. The ditch was made about two feet wide in the bottom, and one rod was considered a good day's work for a man. Tools were scarce and of poor quality, while the sun-baked soil was full of cobble stones and otherwise hard to dig.

PRESTON MOOREHEAD,
A Child at Sulphur Springs.

Under, such hardships, the men, poorly fed and scantily clothed, would undoubtedly have abandoned the enterprise, but for the influence of the bishop. His good humor and witticisms never failed, and with rare tact and diplomacy, he kept the men from brooding over their troubles, and inspired them with new hope and courage.

MRS. ANN MOOREHEAD THOMAS,
A Child at Sulphur Springs.

Instead of taking the ditch due west to the creek as it is now, the builders brought it down Cedar Hollow and across the bench before it joined Dry Creek. This mistake was rectified the following year, as it was impossible to keep the ditch open on account of the drifting sand. By the latter part of August, the water reached the farms and helped to save part of the corn and potato crop.

A PECULIAR SITUATION.

As illustrative of the conditions existing at this time, it is related that no paper could be found in the settlement on which to keep records except a blank book owned by John Fotheringham. Fotheringham had been a master tailor in Europe, and this book had been used for entering orders for clothes. It was partly full of notations, but as occasion demanded, leaves were torn from it and supplied to the bishop.

THE FIRST BOAT WRECK.

The first boat wreck on the lake in which Lehi people figured, occurred in the latter part of May, 1851, and is related by William Fotheringham.

“Canute Peterson and myself, with Simeon Houd and Seth M. Dodge of Salt Lake City, went on a fishing expedition to the mouth of Provo River, and succeeded in making a good haul of trout and suckers. We left Provo in the evening, and arrived at the mouth of American Fork Creek in the morning, where we intended to make another haul with the seine, but a gale came up from the south and prevented it, so we pulled for home. The lake became very rough, and on being struck by a heavy wave, the boat was completely capsized. Being a good swimmer, I struck out for the shore, a quarter of a mile distant, while two of the men clung to the boat, and the third was washed ashore with the oars under his breast. I now remember vividly the whole incident; the sun was just rising over the Wasatch

H. M. ROYLE.

Mountains as I was battling with the waves to reach the shore, wondering if this was the last time I would ever see it come up. We all finally reached shore and got home safely, and the next day recovered the boat and seine. Through a dream of his wife Elmira, John R. Murdock was prevailed upon not to join us in this fishing trip, and as he could not swim, no doubt he would have lost his life in the wreck."

THE FIRST BOY.

The honor of being Lehi's first boy fell to the lot of Henry Moroni Royle, who was born June 22, 1851. At the time of his birth, his parents were living in a little log house near Dry Creek, directly west of Main Street. Moroni has grown up amid the hard times of pioneer days, and has lived to see the place of his birth become a prosperous city.

THE FIRST BLACKSMITH.

One of the greatest difficulties which beset the pioneers of Dry Creek was the lack of mechanical help, the nearest blacksmith being at Alpine, and that not until 1851. However, in the autumn of that year, on the invitation of Bishop Evans, Joseph J. Smith, a skilled mechanic, came to Dry Creek and set up a blacksmith shop. It was first situated in Evansville, but after the city was laid out, it was moved and located on the present north-east corner of the intersection of Main and Fourth West streets.

THE FIRST HARVEST.

Good crops of wheat were raised this year, but owing to the scarcity of late irrigation water, the other products were a partial failure. As all of the grain was harvested with the cradle, except a small portion which was cut with the sickle, considerable labor was required to handle the crop, so the newcomers of this year were exceptionally welcomed to aid in this work. The threshing was done by beating the grain out with a flail, or tramping it out with the cattle, and winnowing it in the wind.

JOSEPH J. SMITH.

THE FIRST FLOUR MILL.

Towards the close of the year, a flour mill was built at the mouth of American Fork Canyon by Lorenzo H. Hatch, Abram Hatch, and Nathan Packer. It was the first mill in the north end of the county, but it was unfortunately destroyed by fire the following year. However, on the advice of Willard Richards, it was immediately rebuilt by its enterprising owners, and for many years it served the people in grinding their grain.

THE CLOSE OF 1851.

The year closed with Bishop Evans' ward in a very scattered condition. Over thirty families had arrived during the year, and while most of them had remained in Evansville, several had located on springs in the bottoms, the Lott Settlement receiving the greater number of these.

Of the families who arrived this year the following is the best list obtainable: Martin Bushman, Ira J. Willes, Henry Kerns, Canute Peterson, Alexander Loveridge, Ezekiel Hopkins, George Burgess, Orace Murdock, Joseph J. Smith, Thomas Green, Alfred Bell, Harrison Burgess, David Evans, Alonzo D. Rhodes, Samuel Rogers, John S. Lott, Abram Hatch, Lorenzo H. Hatch, Jeremiah Hatch, R. C. Goodson, Mrs. Pamela Lott, Joseph Skeens, Samuel Briggs, Thomas Ashton, Samuel Wise, John R. Murdock, Mrs. Sarah T. Coleman, Abraham Brown, Daniel Collett, Preston Thomas, Isaac Losee, William Sidney Smith Willes.

CHAPTER V.

The Birth of Political Life.

LEHI INCORPORATED.

A BODY of such thorough Americans as composed the little settlement on Dry Creek could not long remain without some form of civil administration. An innate love of law and order—the priceless heritage of their Pilgrim forefathers—soon compelled them to take steps to form some kind of municipal government.

Accordingly, early in 1852, David Evans, on behalf of the people of Dry Creek, presented a petition to the Territorial Legislature, requesting that body to incorporate the little community. This petition was granted, and the city incorporated under the name of Lehi, this Book of Mormon appellation being suggested because the people had moved so frequently.

Lehi was the sixth city in the Territory of Utah to be incorporated, Salt Lake City, Ogden, Provo, Manti, and Parowan having preceded her in 1851. The act of incorporation is deemed of sufficient interest to be presented here in full:

An Act to Incorporate the City of Lehi.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah: That all that portion of the country lying on Dry Creek, in Utah County, bounded as follows, to-wit: commencing at the Utah Lake direct south of the south-east corner of the plat of Evansville, running direct to said corner; from thence north three miles; from thence west to the Jordan River; from thence up the river Jordan to the outlet of the lake; from thence up the lake to the place of beginning, is hereby incorporated into a city, which shall be called the "City of Lehi," and the inhabitants thereof are hereby constituted a body corporate and politic, by the name aforesaid; and shall have perpetual succession, and may have and use a common seal, which they may change and alter at pleasure.

Section 2. The inhabitants of said city, by the name and style aforesaid, shall have power to sue and be sued; to plead and be impleaded; defend and be defended; in all courts of law and equity and in all actions whatsoever; to purchase, receive and hold property, real and personal, in said city; to purchase, receive and hold real property beyond the city, for burying grounds, or other public purposes, for the use of the inhabitants of said city; to sell, lease, convey, or dispose of property, real and personal, for the benefit of said city; to improve and protect such property, and to do all other things in relation thereto as natural persons.

Section 3. There shall be a City Council, to consist of a Mayor, four Aldermen, and nine Councilors, who shall have the qualifications of the electors of said city, and shall be chosen by the qualified voters thereof, and shall hold their offices for two years, and until their sucesors shall be elected and qualified. The City Council shall judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of their own members, and a majority of them shall form a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members, under such penalties as may be prescribed by ordinance.

Section 4. The Mayor, Aldermen, and Councilors, before entering upon the duties of their offices, shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation, that they will support the Constitution of the United States, and the laws of this Territory, and that they will well and truly perform all the duties of their offices, to the best of their skill and abilities.

Section 5. On the first Monday of March next, and every two years hereafter, on said day, an election shall be held for the election of one Mayor, four Aldermen, and nine Councilors, and at the first election under this act, three judges shall be chosen, viva voce, by the electors present. The said judges shall choose two clerks; and the judges and clerks, before entering upon their duties, shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation, such as is now required by law to be taken by judges and clerks of other elections; and at all subsequent elections, the necessary number of judges and clerks by the City Council. At the first election so held, the polls shall be opened at nine o'clock a. m., and closed at six o'clock p. m. At the close of the polls the votes shall be counted, and a statement thereof proclaimed at the front door of the house at which said election shall be held; and the clerks shall leave with each person elected, or at his usual place of residence, within five days after the election, a written notice of his election, and each person so notified, shall within ten days after the election, take the oath or affirmation hereinbefore mentioned. A certificate of which oath shall be recorded with the recorder, whose appointment is hereinafter provided for, and by him preserved; and all subsequent elections shall be held, conducted, and the returns thereof made, as may be provided for by ordinance of the City Council.

Section 6. All free white male inhabitants who are of the age of twenty-one years, who are entitled to vote for Territorial officers, and who shall have been actual residents of said city sixty days next preceding said election, shall be entitled to vote for city officers.

Section 7. The City Council shall have authority to levy and collect taxes for city purposes, upon all taxable property, real and personal, within the limits of the city, not exceeding one-half per cent per annum, upon the assessed value thereof; and may enforce the payment of the same, in any manner to be provided by ordinance, not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States or the laws of this Territory.

Section 8. The City Council shall have power to appoint a Recorder, Treasurer, Assessor and Collector, Marshal, and Supervisors of Streets. They shall also have the power to appoint all such other officers by ordinance, as may be necessary; define the duties of all city officers, and remove them from office at pleasure.

Section 9. The City Council shall have power to require of all officers, appointed in pursuance of this act, bonds with penalty and security, for the faithful performance of their respective duties, such as may be deemed expedient, and also to require all officers appointed as aforesaid, to take an oath for the faithful performance of the duties of their respective offices.

Section 10. The City Council shall have power and authority to make, ordain, establish, and execute all such ordinances, not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, or the laws of this Territory, as they may deem necessary for the peace, benefit, good order, regulation, convenience and cleanliness of said city, for the protection of property therein from destruction by fire or otherwise, and for the health and happiness thereof. They shall have power to fill all vacancies that may happen by death, resignation, or removal in any of the offices herein made elective; to fix and establish all the fees of the officers of said corporation not herein established; to impose such fines, not exceeding one hundred dollars for each offense, as they might deem just, for refusing to accept of any office, in, or under the corporation, or for misconduct therein; to divide the city into wards, and specify the boundaries thereof, and create additional wards; to add to the number of Aldermen and Councilors, and apportion them among the several wards, as may be just and most conducive to the interest of the city.

Section 11. To establish, support, and regulate common schools; to borrow money on the credit of the city: Provided, that no sum or sums of money be borrowed on a greater interest than six per cent per annum; nor shall the interest on the aggregate of all the sums borrowed, and outstanding, ever exceed one-half of the city revenue, arising from taxes assessed on real estate, within this corporation.

Section 12. To make regulations to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases into the city; to make quarantine laws for that purpose, and enforce the same.

Section 13. To appropriate and provide for the payment of the expenses and debts of the city.

Section 14. To establish hospitals, and make regulations for the government of the same; to make regulations to secure the general health of the inhabitants; to declare what shall be nuisances, and to prevent and remove the same.

Section 15. To provide the city with water; to dig wells, lay pump logs and pipes, and erect pumps in the streets for the extinguishment of fires, and convenience of the inhabitants.

Section 16. To open, alter, widen, extend, establish, grade, pave, or otherwise improve and keep in repair streets, avenues, lanes and alleys; and to establish, erect, and keep in repair aqueducts and bridges.

Section 17. To provide for the lighting of the streets, and erecting lamp posts, and establish, support, and regulate night watches; to erect market houses; establish markets and market places, and to provide for the government and regulation thereof.

Section 18. To provide for erecting all needful buildings for the use of the city, and for enclosing, improving, and regulating all public grounds belonging to the city.

Section 19. To license, tax, and regulate auctioneers, merchants, and retailers, grocers and taverns, ordinaries, hawkers, peddlers, brokers, pawn brokers, and money changers.

Section 20. To license, tax, and regulate hacking, carriages, wagons, carts, and drays; and fix the rate to be charged for the carriage of persons, and for wagonage, cartage, and drayage of property, as also to license and regulate porters, and fix the rate of portorage.

Section 21. To license, tax, and regulate theatricals, and other exhibitions, shows, and amusements.

Section 22. To tax, restrain, prohibit, and suppress, tippling houses, dram shops, gambling houses, bawdy and other disorderly houses.

Section 23. To provide for the prevention and extinguishment of fires; to regulate the fixing of chimneys, and the flues thereof, and stove pipes, and to organize and establish fire companies.

Section 24. To regulate the storage of gunpowder, tar, pitch, rosin, and other combustible materials.

Section 25. To regulate and order parapet walls and other partition fences.

Section 26. To establish standard weights and measures, and regulate the weights and measures to be used in the city, in all other cases not provided for by law.

Section 27. To provide for the inspection and measuring of lumber, and other building materials; and for the measurement of all kinds of mechanical work.

Section 28. To provide for the inspection and weighing of hay, lime, and stone coal, and measuring of charcoal, fire wood, and other fuel to be sold or used within the city.

Section 29. To provide for and regulate the inspection of tobacco, and of beef, pork, flour, meal; also beer, and whiskey, brandy, and other spirituous or fermented liquors.

Section 30. To regulate the weight, quality, and price of bread, sold and used in the city.

Section 31. To provide for taking the enumeration of the inhabitants of the city.

Section 32. To fix the compensation of all city officers, and regulate the fees of jurors, witnesses, and others, for services rendered, under this or any city ordinance.

Section 33. The City Council shall have exclusive power within the city by ordinance, to license, regulate, suppress, or restrain billiard tables, and from one to twenty pin-alleys, and every other description of gaming or gambling.

Section 34. The City Council shall have exclusive power within the city by ordinance, to license, regulate, or restrain the keeping of ferries, and toll bridges; to regulate the police of the city; to impose fines, forfeitures, and penalties, for the breach of any ordinance; and provide for the recovery of such fines and forfeitures, and the enforcement of such penalties, and to pass such ordinances as may be necessary and proper for carrying into effect and execution the powers specified in this act; provided such ordinances are not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States or any of the laws of this Territory.

Section 35. All ordinances passed by the City Council shall within one month after they have been passed be published in some newspaper printed in said city, or certified copies thereof be posted up in three of the most public places in the city.

Section 36. All ordinances of the city may be proven by the seal of the corporation; and when printed or published in book or pamphlet form, purporting to be printed or published by the authority of the corporation, the same shall be received in evidence in all courts or places, without further proof.

Section 37. The Mayor and Aldermen shall be conservators of the peace within the limits of the city, and shall have all the powers of Justice of the Peace therein, both in civil and criminal cases arising under the laws of the Territory. They shall, as Justices of the Peace, within the limits of said city, perform the same duties; be governed by the same laws; give the same bonds and securities as other Justices of the Peace, and be commissioned as other Justices of the Peace, in and for said city, by the Governor.

Section 38. The Mayor and the Aldermen shall have exclusive jurisdiction in all cases arising under the ordinances of the corporation, and shall issue each process as may be necessary to carry said ordinances into execution and effect. Appeals may be had from any decision or judgment of said Mayor or Aldermen, arising under the ordinances of said city to the Municipal Court, under such regulations as may be prescribed by ordinance, which court shall be composed of the Mayor as Chief Justice, and the Aldermen as Associate Justices; and from the final judgment of the Municipal Court, to the Probate Court of Utah County, in the same manner as appeals are taken from Justice of the Peace; Provided, the parties litigant shall have a right to a trial by jury of twelve men, in all cases before the Municipal Court. The Municipal Court shall have power to grant writs of Habeas Corpus, and try the same in all cases arising under the ordinances of the City Council.

Section 39. The Municipal Court may sit on the first Monday of every month, and the City Council, at such times and places as may at any time be called by the Mayor or any two Aldermen.

Section 40. All processes issued by the Mayor, Aldermen, or Municipal Court, shall be directed to the Marshal, and in the execution thereof, he shall be governed by the same laws as are, or may be prescribed for the direction and compensation of Constables in similar cases. The Marshal shall also perform such other duties as may be required of him under the ordinances of said city, and shall be the principal ministerial officer.

Section 41. It shall be the duty of the Recorder to make and keep accurate records of all ordinances made by the City Council, and of all their proceedings in their corporate capacity, which record shall at all times be open to the inspection of the electors of said city, and shall perform all other duties as may be required of him by the ordinances of the City Council, and shall serve as clerk of the Municipal Court.

Section 42. When it shall be necessary to take private property for opening, widening, or altering any public street, lane, avenue, or alley, the corporation shall make a just compensation therefor, to the person whose property is so taken; and if the amount of such compensation cannot be agreed upon, the Mayor shall cause the same to be ascertained by a jury of six disinterested men, who shall be inhabitants of the city.

Section 43. All jurors empaneled to enquire into the amount of benefit or damages that shall happen to the owners of property so proposed to be taken, shall first be sworn to that effect, and shall return to the Mayor their inquest in writing, signed by each juror.

Section 44. In case the Mayor shall, at any time, be guilty of a palpable omission of duty, or shall wilfully and corruptly be guilty of oppression, malconduct, or partiality, in the discharge of the duties of his office, he shall be liable to indictment in the Probate Court of Utah county; and on conviction, he shall be liable to fine and imprisonment; and the court shall have power on the recommendation of the jury to add to the judgment of the court, that he be removed from office.

Section 45. The City Council shall have power to provide for the punishment of offenders and vagrants, by imprisonment in the county or city jail, or by compelling them to labor upon the streets, or public works, until the same shall be fully paid; in all cases where such offenders shall fail or refuse to pay the fines and forfeitures which may be recovered against them.

Section 46. The inhabitants of Lehi City shall, from and after the next ensuing two years from the first Monday of April next, be exempt from working on any road or roads beyond the limits of said city. But all taxes devoted to road purposes shall, from and after said term of two years, be collected and expended by, and under the direction of the supervisor of streets, within the limits of said city.

Section 47. The Mayor, Aldermen, and Councilors of said city shall, in the first instance, be appointed by the Governor and Legislature of said Territory of Utah, and shall hold their office until superseded by the first election.

Section 48. This act is hereby declared to be a public act, and shall be in force from and after its passage.

Approved February 5, 1852.

IRRIGATION WATER GRANT.

Another important act of the Territorial Legislature was passed at this time, granting to the people of Lehi one-third of the waters of American Fork Creek. While the legislature does not now presume to act in such matters, it is evident that the passage of this act helped to secure permanently to Lehi this share of the water. The act follows:

“An act in relation to the waters of American Creek in Utah County.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah: That the inhabitants of the settlement of Dry Creek in Utah County are hereby authorized and allowed to take out, at some convenient point, the waters of American Creek, and use the same for their benefit: Provided that no more than one-third part of said waters shall be so taken for the use of said settlement on Dry Creek.

LEHI'S FIRST LEGISLATOR.

Active in securing the passage of these acts was David Evans, who had been elected from Utah County to serve in the first Territorial Legislature. He has the honor, therefore, of being the first of the long line of men who have ably served Lehi in the legislative councils of the Commonwealth.

CHANGES IN THE BISHOPRIC.

In the spring of 1852, Jehial McConnell and Lorenzo H. Hatch were selected and set apart as First and Second Counselors to Bishop Evans, as Charles Hopkins and David Savage were released to occupy other positions in the church.

SUGAR BEETS.

John Taylor, in the spring of 1852, had imported from France and brought across the plains by ox team, a quantity of sugar beet seed, and Bishop Evans with others had been able to secure a small part of this. The beets they planted matured successfully, but were used for making molasses rather than sugar. In this was presaged an industry which was destined to become the most important factor of Lehi's commercial development—the sugar industry.

CLOSE OF 1852.

During the year large additions had been made to the cultivated lands, and a fence had been constructed around the Big Field. The ditch from American Fork Canyon had also been changed to avoid the shifting sands of Cedar Hollow. The close of the year found the people in the same scattered condition as at the beginning, no attempt having been made to lay out a city. The following are some of the families who arrived in 1852: William Hudson, Daniel S. Thomas, John Zimmerman, Philip Olmstead, Samuel Harwood, Samuel T. Smith, John Jacobs, George

ALTERATION OF TIME OF FIRST ELECTION.

According to Section 5 of the act of incorporation, the first municipal election should have been held on the first Monday in March, 1852, and in Section 47, the Governor and Legislature were empowered to appoint, in the first instance, the mayor, aldermen, and councilors, who were to hold office until the first election. For some reason, however, neither the officers were appointed nor the election held. To remedy this condition of affairs, the Legislature, the next January, passed the following brief and liberal act:

An act altering the time of holding the first election for city officers in Lehi, Fillmore and Cedar Cities.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah: That the inhabitants of Lehi, Fillmore, and Cedar Cities are hereby authorized and empowered to hold their first election for city officers at any time during the present year that to them shall be the most convenient; and who shall hold their offices until superseded by due course of law.

Approved January 17, 1853.

THE FIRST MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

Twelve days after the passage of this act, on January 29, the first municipal election was held. As compared with the election campaigns and activities of modern times, it was an extremely quiet affair. On account of the interest attached in the first of such events, the complete account of this election, as contained in an old record of the City Council, is given below.

“The inhabitants of the town of Evansville met at the school house in the said town for the purpose of organizing and electing the City Council of the City of Lehi, on the 29th day of January, 1853.

“Business commenced by appointing David Evans, Charles Hopkins, and Claiborne Thomas to act as judges of election, and Jehial McConnell and John Spires to act as clerks.

SILAS P. BARNES.
First Mayor of Lehi—1853-1854.

“Voted unanimously that Silas P. Barnes* be Mayor of said city, also that David Evans, David Savage, Charles Hopkins, and Abraham Losee be Aldermen; William S. S. Willes, Harrison Burgess, Daniel Collett, Israel Evans, Samuel W. White, Ezekiel Hopkins, Lorenzo H. Hatch, Thomas Green, and Richard C. Gibbons be Councilors for the City of Lehi.

“The above named gentlemen were then sworn into office by Charles Hopkins, Esquire.”

On December 13, 1853, the City Council filled the following vacancies, caused by the removal of several officers from the city: Thomas Taylor to succeed John Spires as Recorder; Elisha H. Davis and Harrison Burgess to fill the offices of Aldermen vacated by David Savage and Charles Hopkins; John R. Murdock and Daniel Thomas to succeed Samuel D. White and Thomas Green as Councilors.

On account of the necessity of making laws to define the duties of the appointive officers, the City Council was not able immediately to fill all such offices. But finally, on December 16, 1853, the following were installed: Water Master, Daniel Collett; two Policemen for each of the four sides of the fort as follows: south side, Alonzo D. Rhodes and Daniel Cox; east side, John Zimmerman and Richard C. Gibbons; north side, Abel Evans and Prime Coleman; west side, Preston Thomas and David Clark.*

On the 3rd of January, 1854, Ezekiel Hopkins was appointed Assessor and Collector, and Daniel Cox, Treasurer. The next day, Sylvanus Collett and Alonzo D. Rhodes qualified as Constable and Marshal, respectively. On the tenth of the same month, Orrace Murdock was appointed Policeman in the place of Alonzo D. Rhodes, promoted, and on the 31st, John Zimmerman was selected as Road Supervisor, and Richard C. Gibbons as Captain of Police. In addition to these a City Surveyor was designated, but his name does not appear.

THOMAS TAYLOR.

The standing committees of the City Council were Municipal Law, Revision, Ways and Means, Roads and Bridges, and Improvements and Public Library.

MINUTES OF THE CITY COUNCIL.

To illustrate the formal and dignified manner in which these pioneer statesmen transacted their parliamentary business, the minutes of two sessions of the first City Council are given in full:

*See Chap. VI—Fort wall.

Wednesday evening, December 28, 1853,

Council met pursuant to adjournment at the usual place, (the log school house). Alderman Evans took the chair and called the meeting to order. Roll called, a quorum present. Prayer by Councilor Murdock. Minutes of last meeting read and accepted.

No petitions.

An ordinance was presented by the committee on Municipal Law entitled: An ordinance in relation to fires. Was received, when it was moved, seconded, and carried, that it lay on the table to come up in its order.

An ordinance was presented entitled: An ordinance respecting firearm and powder plots. Moved, seconded, and carried, that the ordinance be received and lay on the table to come up in its regular order.

Moved, seconded, and carried, that the officers elected to fill the vacancies of the council, be legally sworn and give bonds before proceeding to any further business.

Moved, seconded, and carried, that a committee of three be appointed, to visit the Marshal, John R. Murdock, Assessor and Collector Abram Hatch, and Constable John S. Lott, and know whether they will act in their respective offices or not.

William S. S. Willes, Joseph Skeens, and Ezekiel Hopkins were appointed said committee.

Ezekiel Hopkins was appointed a committee to draft an ordinance creating a Treasurer.

JOHN S. LOTT.

On motion the council adjourned to Tuesday evening, January 3, 1854.

Dismissed with prayer by Councilor Thomas.

Tuesday evening, January 3, 1854.

Council met pursuant to adjournment at the school house of the City of Lehi. Roll called, a quorum present. Prayer by Lorenzo H. Hatch. Minutes of last meeting read and, on motion, accepted.

ALONZO D. RHODES.

On motion, Ezekiel Hopkins was appointed Assessor and Collector for the City of Lehi.

An ordinance was presented entitled: An ordinance creating a Treasurer. On motion, was received and, after its first reading, the ordinance, on motion, passed entire.

On motion, Daniel Cox was elected Treasurer.

Councilor Hopkins now came forward and gave bonds and was sworn into office by Thomas Taylor, Recorder.

John S. Lott then gave bonds, and the Recorder administered

The committee to visit certain officers reported: John R. Murdock not willing to serve as Marshal, that Abram Hatch would report himself, and that John S. Lott was willing to serve as Constable for the City of Lehi. On motion, the report was received.

Abram Hatch, being present, was called to know if he would act as Assessor and Collector. Stated that if he could receive pay for his services, he was willing. The council informed him they could promise him such pay as they got. This not being satisfactory, he refused to act.

to him the oath of office. On motion, the council adjourned to Friday evening, January 6, 1854.

Benediction by Murdock.

The following minutes of the second council might also prove interesting:

Saturday, May 27, 1854, 4 o'clock p. m.

Council met pursuant to adjournment at the school house of the City of Lehi.

The Mayor (David Evans) took the chair and called the meeting to order. Roll called, a quorum present. Prayer by Alderman Thomas. Minutes of a special meeting held May 15 read and accepted. Minutes of a meeting held May 12 read and accepted.

Mr. John Murdock presented a resignation of his office as Alderman to the council. On motion of Councilor Skeen, the resignation was accepted.

A petition was presented by Alderman Thomas from Martin Bushman and others, praying the council to take into consideration the pay for cleaning out water ditches, etc. On motion of Alderman Bell, the petition was received. After considerable discussion, on motion, the petition was thrown under the table.

POST OFFICE.

Early in 1853, Lehi was placed in communication with the outside world by the establishment of a post office with David Evans as postmaster. He fitted up a small room in his house for an office, the sole equipment being a green painted box divided into alphabetically arranged pigeon holes.*

Before the trans-continental railroad reached Utah, the mail was handled by means of overland stage or the "Pony Express." It often happened that months would elapse, especially during the winter season, between the arrivals of the mails. But the people were well satisfied even with this imperfect service.

SECOND CHANGE IN THE BISHOPRIC.

On account of the removal of Jehial McConnell, First Counselor in the Bishopric, to southern Utah, another change was made in the bishop's aids, early in 1853. Lorenzo H. Hatch was selected as First Counselor, and Abel Evans as Second Counselor to Bishop Evans.

DANIEL S. THOMAS.

JORDAN BRIDGE.

The first bridge to span the Jordan River near Lehi was built this spring under the supervision of Thomas Ashton. It was the result of a commercial enterprise, a stock company having been organized for the purpose. For this company, Charles Hopkins obtained a charter from the Legislative Assembly, which empowered the holders both to construct the bridge and to collect toll for crossing it. The act follows:

An act granting unto Charles Hopkins and others the right to build a bridge across the river Jordan.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah: That Charles Hopkins, Ezekiel Hopkins, and Alonzo D. Rhodes, citizens of Lehi City, Utah County, are hereby authorized and empowered to form a company for the purpose of building a toll bridge across the Jordan River at any point within ten miles north of Utah Lake, that the city may determine.

Section 2. The within named Charles Hopkins, and Alonzo D. Rhodes, are hereby authorized to take, and sell stock at $25.00 each share, until a sufficient amount of stock shall have been taken to defray the cost of building said bridge.

Section 3. There shall be a committee of three chosen from among, and by the stockholders, whose duty it shall be to keep an accurate account of all expenditures, also to superintend the building, and to do such other business for the company as the majority of the stockholders may deem expedient for the general good.

Section 4. Every stockholder shall be entitled to one vote for each share he may have taken.

Section 5. The bridge shall be built to the acceptance of the Territorial Commissioner.

Section 6. The City Council of Lehi City are hereby authorized to regulate the rates of toll for crossing said bridge.

Section 7. The company thus formed may have the right to hold claim on the bridge, until they have realized one hundred per cent over and above all expenditures; after which said bridge shall be turned over to the Territorial Commissioner in good repair, as the property of the Territory.

Approved, January 21, 1853."

From the first, the bridge proved to be a reasonable success and rewarded the promoters with a substantial rate of interest on their investment.

George Zimmerman was among the first toll keepers for the bridge company. For several years also, a man named Jenkins, and later William Ball and his family, lived at the bridge and collected the fees due for crossing. The last collector was Joseph J. H. Colledge, who resided at the bridge for many years.

WILLIAM GOATES.

FIRST CITY ORDINANCE.

As provided in the charter, the regulation of tolls for this bridge was to be under the direction of the City Council, and their first ordinance had to deal with this matter. It is given in full below:

An ordinance defining the amount of toll on Lehi Jordan Bridge.

Section 1. Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Lehi, that the toll of the above named bridge shall be as follows:
 For crossing a vehicle of any kind drawn by two animals...20c
 Or six tickets for .....$1.00
 For each and every vehicle drawn by one animal.....15c
 For each animal and rider or each pack animal.....10c
 For loose horses, mules, jacks, jinnies, and cattle, each.....5c
 For sheep and hogs .....1c
 For each foot passenger .....5c

Section 2. Be it further ordained that any person crossing the above named bridge on a single animal faster than a walk, shall pay a fine of five dollars.

Any person driving a loose team faster than a walk, shall pay a fine of ten dollars.

Also, any person driving a team and wagon faster than a walk, shall pay a fine of fifteen dollars.

Section 3. This ordinance shall be in full force from and after its passage.

Passed July 8, 1853.

FIRST SCHOOL ELECTION.

On February 17, 1854, the City Council passed an ordinance creating a school district which provided that the district should extend to the lines of the municipal corporation; that three trustees were to be elected, who should proceed forthwith to assess and collect taxes with which to build a suitable school house; that the trustees should appoint a clerk to keep a record of their proceedings; and that for the faithful performance of their duties they were compelled to furnish a bond in the sum of one thousand dollars each to the City Council.

The council ordered the election to be held on the twentieth of the month, the polls to open from 12 noon to 1 p. m., and appointed Silas P. Barnes, Preston Thomas and Ira J. Willes, judges of election, with Thomas Taylor as clerk. The result of the election showed that Preston Thomas, Daniel Collett, and William Burgess had been selected as Lehi's first school board.

Thus did the innate tendency of the pioneers towards political organization find expression.

In a remarkably short time after the founding of the community, a stable municipal government with all its departments and offices had been set up and was running smoothly. Truly such a record speaks well for the love of law and order these people possessed.

CHAPTER VI.

Troubles with the Indians.

NOTWITHSTANDING the extremely wise and humane policy of the pioneers of Utah in dealing with the Indians, it was inevitable that trouble should eventually arise. The situation was new for both; the white men, from their previous life in the East and Middle West, were comparatively lacking in knowledge of the character and habits of the red men; while the savages were none too trustful of the intentions of the pale faces, and certain turbulent spirits among them openly showed their hostility. It needed but an overt act, even though unintentional, to kindle the flame.

THE WALKER WAR.

The opportunity finally presented itself through the killing of an Indian in Springville in 1853. One Chief Walkarah immediately incited the neighboring Indians into hostilities, and from these the warlike spirit spread generally among the Indians in the southern part of the Territory. Attacks were made on the settlers and numerous depredations were committed before the uprising was quelled. This trouble was called the Walker War, an incorrect English rendition of the name of the Indian leader.

To protect the settlers, their militia was called to arms, and on July 25, Colonel George A. Smith was placed in command of that part operating south of Salt Lake City. At once he directed the inhabitants of the settlements, as the first means of defense, to gather in forts and barricades.

The question of the location of the proposed fort in Lehi immediately arose. At this time the people were scattered from the present State Road to the lake, although the majority lived in Evansville. Different localities were agitated as being the most desirable, but the choice finally dwindled to two sites—one the present New Survey, (the north-west part of modern Lehi), the other, the site upon which the city was eventually built. The latter was selected because no one had already constructed homes there, thus avoiding rivalry and unpleasantness, and also because the surface well water was considered more desirable.

THE SECOND FORT.

The plan of construction for the fort was not a complex one. It consisted merely of placing the log houses of the settlers end to end, thus forming a hollow square seventy rods long. Inside the enclosure were to be built the corrals, stackyards and stables. As the crops were harvested this fall, they were brought to this place, and later the houses were moved into line. This was not accomplished without reluctance, especially on the part of those who had most recently erected their homes. But the need of defense was so urgent and the labor of moving a log house so comparatively small that eventually everyone was found in the fort. This centralization with its resulting close associations did much to develop and cement the union of community life, furnishing, through the stress of adverse circumstances, an excellent opportunity for the expression of that high regard of civic life which so markedly characterized the people of Utah.*

The log school house was torn down and rebuilt near the northeast corner of the fort, which would be approximately where the Mountain States Telephone office now stands. This move also resulted in the erection of an adobe titling office of two stories and a basement and surrounded with a mud wall. It was quite the most pretentious structure thus far put together in Lehi and stood on the north-west corner of Third West and Main. The building was occasionally used as the meeting place of the City Council and other similar bodies, while for many years the basement served as a jail.

As an additional safeguard against the Indians, a parapet was erected a short distance north of the fort near the State Road. Bishop David Evans and Abel Evans directed the work. The parapet consisted of a trench eight feet wide and five feet deep, enclosing a piece of ground eleven rods square. The excavated earth formed a formidable breastwork. In especially dangerous times, a guard maintained a lookout on the parapet and warned the people in the fort of any approaches of the enemy. This outpost stood immediately north of the present Central School House.

MILITARY ORGANIZATION.

Very early in the history of Utah, a territorial militia, known as the Nauvoo Legion, was organized with military districts in each county and branches in each settlement. The captain of the Lehi division was William Sidney Smith Willes, familiarly known as Sidney Willes, a man noted for his courage and farsightedness, and a former member of the Mormon Battalion. During the turbulent years of Lehi's founding, Captain Willes led his little company on more than one dangerous and difficult expedition.

CAPT. WILLIAM S. S. WILLES.

INDIAN EXPEDITIONS.

Soon after the outbreak of the Walker War, Captain Willes with thirty men was detailed to Salt Creek, (now Nephi) to assist the people there. They served only ten days before returning home. Later an expedition left Lehi with Millard County as the objective point and of this, James Harwood, a member of the company, gives the following interesting account:

“Captain Sidney Willes was ordered to take his company and proceed to Fillmore, the capital of the Territory. William Wadsworth, Abram Hatch, Sylvanus Collett, William Bell, George Coleman, John Hackett, and myself, with others from American Fork and Pleasant Grove, made up the company.

"It was quite an undertaking at that time to find horses and saddles, as but few of these were used, oxen being the principal beasts of burden. By the first of August, we were on the way and succeeded in getting through without any attacks from the Indians. A company from Salt Lake City, who were a few days' march ahead of us, were attacked at Willow Springs and several of their number killed. When we arrived in Fillmore, we acted as guards for the settlement and stock while the people gathered their crops and placed themselves in a position of defense.

Shortly afterwards, we received orders to gather up all the surplus cattle and bring them to Salt Lake City for safety. When we started on our trip, we took with us a cannon, John Hackett and myself having it in charge. We had no occasion to use it, but I think it had a salutary effect upon the minds of the red men. They said they did not mind being fired upon with guns, but they most seriously objected to being shot at with wagons. The old cannon is now in the museum in Salt Lake City. When we arrived in Lehi, we could not find our houses, as they had been moved to form a part of the fort which had been built in our absence."

By exercising care and vigilance, the people of Lehi were successful in protecting themselves and their property from the Indians. The men were armed wherever they went. As they worked in the fields, they kept constantly on guard for ambushes, and the same precaution was observed within the fort. No one dared go alone into the mountains after wood or stock. Herders took care of the cattle by day and drove them into the stockade for the night. These strict measures undoubtedly saved the settlers in Lehi much trouble and loss; because, as compared with some of their neighbors, they were singularly free from the depredations of the red men.

The close of 1853 saw the cessation of hostilities around Lehi, but in the southern part of the Territory the so-called war lasted until the spring of 1854. By this time, about five hundred people had made their homes in Lehi.

A FORT WALL PLANNED.

As a precautionary measure for possible future outbreaks of the Indians, the City Council decided to build an eight foot adobe wall with a rock foundation around the present fort. To construct this, the following committee was appointed, February 17, 1854: David Evans, Preston Thomas, William Burgess, Sen., Harrison Burgess, and Lorenzo H. Hatch. The plans for this wall were never carried out, but they undoubtedly opened the way for the construction of a much larger one the following summer.

BRIGHAM YOUNG,
GOVERNOR OF THE TERRITORY OF UTAH

To all to whom these Presents shall come:

KNOW YE, that David Evans, having been elected to the office of Mayor of Battalion of Infantry of the Sechi Post, of Utah Military District,
I, BRIGHAM YOUNG, GOVERNOR, do and on behalf of the people of said Territory, DO COMMISSION him Major of Battalion of Infantry of the Sechi Post of Utah Military District, of the NAUVOO LEGION, and of the Militia of the Territory of Utah; to take rank from the 11th day of March 1857, being the time of his election to office.

He is therefore, promptly and diligently to discharge the duties of said office, by doing and performing all things thereunto belonging; and I do strictly require all officers and soldiers under his command to be obedient to his orders; and he is to obey all such orders and directions, as he shall receive from time to time, from the Commander-in-Chief, or his superior officers.

SECOND MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

Because of the delay in the first municipal election, the officials then selected acted only for thirteen months, when on March 6, 1854, the second election was held. But one ticket was in the field and no opposition to it was shown. Alfred Bell, Stephen H. Pierce, and Daniel Cox acted as judges of election with Thomas Taylor as clerk. The choice of the voters was as follows: Mayor, David Evans; Aldermen, John R. Murdock, Preston Thomas, William Burgess and Alfred Bell; Councilors, Abraham Losee, Daniel Collett, Lorenzo H. Hatch, Ezekiel Hopkins, Joseph

THOMAS ASHTON.

Skeens, Abel Evans, Thomas Ashton, Daniel Cox and Richard Gibbons. Later it was discovered that Abraham Losee had not become a citizen of the United States, so his seat was denied him. William S. S. Willes received an appointment to act in his place. The newly elected City Council appointed the following officials: Recorder, Thomas Taylor; Marshal, Alonzo D. Rhodes; Constables, Sylvanus Collett and John S. Lott; Captain of Police, Orrace C. Murdock; Policemen, John Zimmerman, Prime Coleman, William Sharp, David Clark, James W. Taylor, Thomas G. Winn, and Charles Galloway; Water Master, Daniel Collett; Street Supervisor, John Zimmerman; Field Committee, Daniel Collett, Joseph Skeens, and William Burgess. As no treasurer was appointed, it is probable that Daniel Cox continued to act in this office, unless, indeed, experience had taught that the position was entirely unnecessary. On May 27, 1854, William S. S. Willes succeeded John R. Murdock as Alderman, the latter having resigned. Abraham Losee, having in the meantime sworn allegiance to the United States, filled the vacancy in the council caused by the promotion of Willes. Later, Losee became an Alderman to succeed Daniel S. Thomas, who resigned, and Stephen H. Pierce, in turn, replaced Losee. Changes also occurred in the appointive offices—Justin J. Merrill as Constable and George Coleman as Policeman in place of John S. Lott and Prime Coleman respectively, the two latter having gone on missions. A later change was the promotion of Daniel Collett, March 2, 1855, to the office of Alderman, in place of William Burgess, who had resigned.

The vacancy in the council was filled by Thomas Karren. Still another vacancy in the council, caused by the removal of Richard Gibbons to Salt Lake, was filled June 7, by the appointment of John S. Lott.

A PECULIAR OFFICE.

One of the legislative results of the second City Council was the following ordinance:

An ordinance creating a deposit for lost property.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the City Council of the City of Lehi, that there be a person appointed to take charge of lost property that may be found within the limits of this City, and deliver the same to the owner when called for or proven.

Sec. 2. Be it further ordained, that it shall be the duty of every person or persons finding property within the limits of this City, to deliver the same forthwith to the person appointed for that purpose.

Sec. 3. Any person or persons not complying with the requirements of this ordinance, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars.

Sec. 4. This ordinance to be in effect from and after its publication.

Passed November 16, 1854. Published November 19, 1854.

Stephen H. Pierce was the first man to occupy this position and hold the pretentious title of Superintendent of Lost and Found. The office has long since ceased to exist.*

BOARD OF EXAMINERS.

Another interesting ordinance of the second City Council was one which created a "Board of Examiners," whose duties consisted in determining the fitness of applicants for the position of school teacher. One of the first examinations was a difficult problem in long division, the recitation of the multiplication table, the reading of a few paragraphs from the Bible, and the writing of a few lines as a display of penmanship. The first members of this board were Alonzo P. Raymond, John Butler, and William Vance.

THE FORT WALL.

In May, 1854, Brigham Young concluded a treaty of peace with Chief Walker, and upon his return to Salt Lake City was caught in a blinding snow-storm on the west side of Utah Lake. Reaching Lehi on the fourth of June, he decided, because of the inclemency of the weather, and also because he desired to warn the people of possible future danger, to stop in the little settlement and hold a meeting. The advice he gave at this gathering was to proceed immediately with the erection of a strong fort wall, an undertaking in Lehi which had been contemplated but as yet not begun. Governor Young, because of his recent experience with the red men, was deeply impressed with the necessity for caution, and so expressed himself. Heber C. Kimball, who accompanied the Governor, called attention to the fact that the recent snow fall might be used to some present advantage in dampening the earth to be used in the construction of the wall.

Work was accordingly begun the next day. Bishop David Evans, who was also Mayor at this time, directed the surveying of the city, previous to the building of the wall. The result of this work, which was performed with a pocket compass and a carpenter's square,* was a plat containing sixteen square blocks twenty rods long, intersected with streets six rods in width. Just inside the wall, there was left an eight rod street on all sides except the south, where it narrowed to five rods. Thus the dimensions of the fort were 114 rods in length and 111 rods in width, the wall enclosing the whole.

The wall itself was no small thing. Standing twelve feet in height, it sloped from a bottom six feet in thickness to a top of three feet. For the use of the defenders, portholes, eight feet from the ground and a rod apart, might be used. The bastions which projected out from the walls midway between the corners served as an additional protection. Entrance to the fort could be made through gates on each side, which were well guarded through their closeness to the bastions.

The construction of the wall proved to be an arduous and difficult task. First the earth had to be mixed to the proper consistency, this work often being performed with wooden spades made by Charles Barnes, the city's first cooper. Then it was necessary to tramp the mud into the wall, in itself an undertaking of no mean dimensions. Each layer must dry thoroughly before the next could be applied, and this delayed the work considerably. In view of the small number of people and their meager resources, it must be granted that they completed a colossal enterprise.

As a means of insuring the performance of the work on the wall, the sixteen blocks in the fort were divided into lots, eight to each block, ten rods in length and five in width. On alternate blocks the lots faced east and west, and north and south, respectively. For one of these lots, the owner was compelled to build four rods of wall or pay the equivalent—sixty bushels of wheat or sixty dollars. During the summer and fall of 1854, work continued steadily on this undertaking, and while practically all parts of the wall were finished, Tunis Rappley was the only man to complete fully his four rods to its full height. What was accomplished, however, served as an excellent defense, and together with the guards which were placed at the gates, was effective in keeping out marauders. This practice lasted during two years and the very night it was discontinued, an Indian broke into the fort and stole two of the best horses there.

CHARLES BARNES.

With the erection of a wall, the people moved their houses from the former fort to their city lots. Many of them, however, erected new dwellings. In this building era, the adobe—that sun-dried brick which was so well known in Western pioneer days—began to come into its usefulness. Even the log houses appeared more pretentious, since now the logs were hewn, and a few could boast of old-fashioned shingled roofs. But the mud-thatched roof and the dugout were destined to continue for many years yet to be the common dwelling.*

PIONEER DAY, 1854.

For the first time since the founding of the city, the people, on July 24, celebrated Pioneer Day. The celebration took the form of a procession through the streets, led by a band consisting of three violinists—Alonzo D. Rhodes, Sylvanus Collett and Stephen H. Pierce. Following these came twelve young men and twelve young ladies dressed in white. It is said the ingenuity and resources of the people were taxed to the utmost to furnish these white clothes. Next in line marched the Church officials and the militia, and a number of citizens carrying banners brought up the rear. Strange to say, one of the banners read "Peace and Plenty." After parading the streets, the procession drew up in front of the log school house where a brush bowery had been constructed. Here a program was enjoyed. A dance concluded the festivities of the day. Notwithstanding all existing hardships and difficulties, it is affirmed by the participants that every one enjoyed a most thorough good time.

THE INDIAN HOUSE.

Not the least interesting of the houses in the fort was the so-called Indian House. This was a four-roomed adobe structure built against the north wall, near the present north-west corner of Third West and First North. Its purpose seems to have been two-fold—a reward for a clan of Indians under a Chief Yan Tan who had aided Bishop Evans in capturing the Indian murderers of two white boys named Weeks from Cedar Fort, and also a means of attempting to civilize these dusky friends. The first purpose failed in part, and the second entirely. Only in the day time would the red men occupy the house built by the pale faces—at night, no other shelter than their “wickiups” would suffice; and after an Indian child had died in the house, they would never enter it again. Their attempted civilization succeeded only to the extent of the hours of play which both red and white children enjoyed with each other. After being vacated by the savages, the house served as a temporary shelter for new arrivals, and many are the families of Lehi whose first residence was the Indian House.

*The Pioneer Monument has since been erected to commemorate the construction of this wall and it stands where once stood the north wall of the fort and twenty-six rods from its north-east corner. (Chap. XIX.)

THE TINTIC WAR.

The so-called Tintic War was a local disturbance in the north end of Utah County. It arose from the stealing of an ox from a herd of cattle on the west side of Utah Lake, in charge of Abraham Hunsacker of Goshen. On February 22, Sheriff Wall of Provo set out from that place with a posse of ten men to arrest the Indian thief. The result proved to be a general fight with the tribesmen of the culprit, who were encamped in Cedar Valley. Reinforcements being necessary, the sheriff called on the Lehi militia. A company of fifteen men under command of Captain Willes and John S. Lott responded, some of whom were William Clark, James Lamb, John Glynes, John Karen, John Catlin, George Winn, William Skeens, Joseph Cousins, Frank Molen, Sylvanus Collett, and Alonzo D. Rhodes.

Leaving Lehi on the morning of February 26, and crossing Utah Lake on the ice, the little company proceeded to the Lone Tree Ranch to guard the cattle which were kept there. To their dismay, they discovered that they were already too late; both herders, Henry Moran and Washington Carson, had already met their death at the hands of the militant savages. There remained only to drive the cattle north to Chimney Rock Pass and camp for the night, James Lamb and John Glynes having been sent, in the meantime, to inform the people at Cedar Fort of the sad fate of the two herders. Camp having been pitched, an animal was killed and the party fed. During the meal, Joseph Cousins jestingly remarked, "If the Indians kill me, I wish to die with a full stomach." Because of the intense cold, a roaring fire was made. Cousins and Sylvanus Collett, being delegated to secure wood, proceeded to a nearby bunch of trees to cut some. They were busily engaged when Collett, glancing up, saw an Indian peering out from behind a tree not far away. Shouting to his companion, "Run, there is an Indian," he hastily fled to camp. Not so with Cousins. He seemed rooted to the spot, unable to help himself. The savages made quick work of him, mercilessly shooting him down and scalping him. The massacre of Cousins proved to be but the prelude to a general attack. Crouching behind wagon boxes and whatever shelter they could obtain, the men returned the fire as best they could. The intervention of nightfall was a great relief to them, however, because the little party was almost helpless before the greater number of Indians. As it was, John Catlin was killed and George Winn mortally wounded. Fearing a continuation of the attack, the company retreated to the lake shore, four miles away, carrying the wounded Winn in their arms. Alonzo D. Rhodes crossed the lake on the ice and reached Lehi the next morning. A relief company immediately returned with him and accompanied the dispirited party home, two of their number dead and one hopelessly wounded. The funeral of these three heroes was held on February 28. A larger force in a few days effectively put an end to the "Tintic War."

Such were the troubles which the early settlers of Lehi had with their savage neighbors. Precaution and vigilance meant safety to them, the lack of it would have resulted in the loss of life and property. The so-called "wars" of those early days may appear trivial and petty to modern eyes, but in the days of Lehi's founding they meant life or death.

CHAPTER VII.

Initial Struggles and Hardships.

THE Indians did not constitute the only difficulty the pioneers of Lehi had to overcome. Nature herself seemed for a time to be arrayed against them. While it is true that the development of a new country entails many hardships and presents an abundance of perplexing problems, yet it would almost seem that the early inhabitants of Lehi, in common with the pioneers of all Utah, were compelled to meet a succession of misfortunes and adverse circumstances far beyond the ordinary. What these blows of Dame Fortune were and how the people met them, forms an interesting part of Lehi's story.

GRASSHOPPERS.

In August, 1854, began the first of a series of costly invasions by the grasshoppers. Appearing in countless myriads, they settled down on the fields and devoured everything in their path. Nothing green escaped their voracious appetites. Fortunately most of the crops had already been harvested, so the damage wrought by the pest was inconsiderable. The grasshoppers soon died, and the people congratulated themselves on escaping so easily. But in this they assumed too much, for the insects had deposited their eggs and dire havoc was to follow the next year.

THE FIRST HARNESS.

To James Harwood belongs the honor of making the first harness ever manufactured in Lehi. From leather, tanned by Samuel Mulliner in Salt Lake City, he put together, in 1854, the first product of a business which he kept active until the time of his death, and which is now conducted by his son-in-law, John T. Winn.

FIRST THRESHING MACHINE.

The summer of 1854 also witnessed the importation of the first agricultural machinery into Lehi—a threshing machine. Compared to modern standards it was but a sorry affair, since it did not separate the chaff from the wheat. This operation was performed by hand. A tread mill, run by horses, furnished the motive power. A few years later, Bishop Evans secured a fanning mill and this proved of inestimable assistance. Both the threshing machine and the fanning mill were owned and operated by Bishop David Evans, Thomas Karren, and Daniel Collett.

GRASSHOPPER WAR.

Encouraged with the success of the few preceding years, the people planted crops in 1855 on a more extensive scale than ever. Growth during the spring months promised a bounteous harvest, and the farmers were already felicitating themselves on their good fortune. But their hopes were soon to be blasted. With the arrival of warm weather came also the hoppers, the sequel to the invasion of the year previous. Growing with astonishing rapidity, they soon swarmed into the fields and began their work of devastation. A marked peculiarity about these pests was that they seemed always to travel across a field in a southerly direction. Devouring everything in their path, leaving not a single green herb standing, their departure saw the fields absolutely barren and waste. Only a very few patches of grain south of Dry Creek were left standing.

To combat this plague and to save if possible some of the crops which meant so much to them, the settlers made desperate efforts and utilized various schemes. They dug ditches, filled them with water, and drove the hoppers into them; they scattered winrows of straw over the fields and when these were covered with the insects set them on fire; they dug holes in the ground, brushed the "Ironclads" into them and covered them with earth. But all of their work seemed to be wasted; they were unable to perceive that the numbers of the creatures were in the slightest diminished. By the middle of June, however, the wings of the grasshoppers were fully grown and they flew away, leaving but a desolate waste where once had been a promise of bounteous crops.

In order that food stuffs be obtained, the people planted the devastated fields in corn and potatoes. Fortune, which had been so unkind to them in the spring, now bestowed her good graces upon them; for the lateness of the arrival of snow and frost in the autumn allowed these crops to mature.

MRS. CANUTE PETERSON.

Of the very few patches of grain harvested in 1855, one belonged to Mrs. Canute Peterson, and the circumstances attending its survival, as related by her daughter, are sufficiently noteworthy to deserve narrating. Owing to the absence of her husband on a mission, the responsibility of tilling the land fell upon Mrs. Peterson. She was unable to obtain assistance so attempted the planting of the crop herself. In furrows made with a hoe, she planted the precious kernels of wheat and because of her anxiety to perform the work well, she covered them deeply with soil. An acre of land was utilized in this laborious manner. Because of the lateness and depth of planting, the wheat did not show above the ground until after the departure of the grasshoppers, so that when the other fields were barren and waste, that of Mrs. Peterson was covered with a luxuriant growth. Sixty bushels of wheat was the generous reward bestowed by Mother Earth, in addition to sixty bushels of corn and some potatoes. With these, this good lady was able to provide, during the following winter, for seven orphans, and to give generous aid to numerous neighbors.

FIRST FRUIT TREES.

The spring of 1855 marked the beginning of an industry which has since developed into one of the most profitable carried on in Lehi. At this time, Abram Hatch, James W. Taylor, and John R. Murdock brought the first apple and peach trees into Lehi. Since then, fruit raising has been extensively and profitably carried on.

HARD TIMES.

The winter of 1855 and 1856 is noted for being probably the most severe in the history of Utah. In common with others, the people of Lehi suffered intensely during this time. Heavy snows and extremely cold weather continued until late in the spring. With but few comforts to offset the intense cold, and with a small store of food owing to the failure of the crops the year previous, the people were subjected to deep and prolonged suffering. Every expedient was resorted to in order to alleviate this trying condition. Sego bulbs, thistle roots, and artichokes, together with pig weed "greens," constituted a disagreeable but unavoidable part of their fare. With only such nourishment as could be obtained from this too exclusively vegetarian diet, it is small wonder that men were often seen staggering along the streets from sheer weakness.

Concerning these strenuous and trying times, Samuel Briggs relates the following:

“The difficulty of obtaining bread to eat was only surpassed by the trouble we had in getting something to go with it. Indeed, this often proved impossible, so dry bread frequently formed our fare. The people made molasses of beets and occasionally of squash and of parsnips, but of the three, beet molasses was the least repulsive. The cooking was done in large iron or brass kettles, of which there were very few in the town. ‘Grandma’ Jacobs had an old iron kettle which went the rounds for molasses making. Its broken pieces were held together by an iron band round the outside. When the kettle was to be used, the cracks were filled with flour paste of which a small quantity was also kept on hand to stop leaks during the process of cooking. It sometimes happened that small pieces of beet were left in the molasses and these the children considered great delicacies."

CRADLING GRAIN.

These conditions made the harvesting of the crop the following season a long-looked-for and eagerly anticipated event. Although only one-third of the usual amount of grain had been sowed, the result was an exceptionally bounteous harvest. Eagerly did the people seek the first few ripened heads of grain and with great rejoicing make them into bread. The survivors of those hard times say that the first bread made from this harvest was sweeter and more delicious than any other.

THE LIBERTY POLE.

In 1856 the people of Lehi erected a flag pole upon which to unfurl the emblem of their country. Preceding the Fourth of July of that year, William Dawson—familiarily called Uncle Billy—brought from West Canyon a tall, straight pole, which was set up at the north-east corner of the Meeting House lot.

Known as the "Liberty Pole," it performed yeoman service for over thirty-seven years, when on July 5, 1893, it was taken down by order of the City Council as being unsafe.

WILLIAM SNOW.

THIRD MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

Except for a small number of ordinances and some extremely indistinct memorandums, there exist no authentic records of the third municipal election and the third coterie of city officers. The election was held in February, 1856, with the following results, as nearly as can be ascertained: Mayor, David Evans; Aldermen, Alfred Bell, Lorenzo H. Hatch, J. W. Morton, and William Snow; Councilors, Abel Evans, Daniel S. Thomas, Thomas Ashton, John S. Lott, Daniel Collett, William S. S. Willes, Ezekiel Hopkins, James W. Taylor, and Canute Peterson; Recorder and Auditor, Thomas Taylor; Marshal, Alonzo D. Rhodes; Treasurer, Lorenzo H. Hatch; Assessor and Collector, James Harwood.

CHAPTER VIII.

Early Cultural Activity.

ONE of the favorite pretensions of those who have criticised the pioneers of Utah is that they were largely illiterate and uneducated. They attempt to insinuate and inveigh against the pretended lack of refinement and culture in Utah as compared with that of her sister states east of the Missouri. Teacher and layman alike, no matter whether informed or not, have taken their fling at the founders of the Commonwealth. It is only recently, in fact, that an eminent professor of history in a prominent American university displayed the usual antagonism—to say nothing of misjudgment—in a text book he published, by making the statement that the farmers in the colonies in Revolutionary times “had reached about the same plane of civilization as that now occupied by the farmers of Utah.”

But the slightest examination of early Utah history reveals the utter fallacy of these criticisms. The pioneers of Utah were among the most highly civilized and cultured Americans of their time. Far from being the ignorant, uncouth frontiersmen their critics paint them to be, they were drawn almost wholly from the best families of New England and the Middle West. Their state of culture soon became evident after their arrival in Utah; for among their first acts was to establish a school system which has developed into the envy of all Utah's sister states. Art, literature, music, the drama, soon found and kept a place among the founders, and of other kinds of cultural development there was no lack.

ELISHA H. DAVIS, SR., AND WIFE,
Pioneers of 1853.

Lehi is a good mirror of the whole State in this respect. The steps the little community took to advance civilization, the difficulties encountered in making these efforts, and their widespread effect make an interesting study.

THE FIRST SCHOOL HOUSE.

In the fall of 1851, just one year after the arrival of the first settlers on Sulphur Springs, the people of Evansville erected a school house. It was a little log structure, eighteen by twenty-four feet, and was situated a short distance west of the present crossing of the D. & R. G. railroad and Dry Creek. The building was fitted up for school purposes in the best manner possible under the conditions. A large fire place in one end served to keep the interior warm. For desks, the children used rough slab benches without backs. Other furniture in the room consisted of a long table at which the pupils practiced writing.

The equipment of the school otherwise was a serious problem. Books were extremely scarce, and of those available hardly any were duplicates. Some Bibles and Books of Mormon and a very few readers and spellers—relics of other and better days—were with difficulty gathered and used. Two or more pupils had to content themselves with one book. Preston Thomas was the first school teacher, and his problem can be imagined somewhat when it is considered that his school ranged from the learning of the alphabet to long division, hardly two of his thirty or forty pupils being in the same stage of advancement. But in spite of all these handicaps, school was held, and that successfully.

Nor was the school house limited to use as a temple of learning. Being the first public building, it served alike as school house, meeting house, city hall, ball room, theatre, and the gathering place for assemblies of all kinds. At its completion a rousing picnic was held in it, and who can doubt that the little place saw just as enjoyable a time as any of our pretentious modern structures?

This little building continued serving its purpose many years. Later, school was held in the Meeting House until the Thurman School House was constructed, an edifice in which nearly all the adult population of Lehi has attended school.*

HOME DRAMATIC ORGANIZATIONS.

It was during the winter of 1854-1855 that the amusement-loving nature of the people took definite form in the organization of the first home dramatic association of Lehi. Of this association, Thomas Taylor was president and James W. Taylor, stage manager. These two, with the following, put on the first performances: William W. Taylor, Mrs. Isabell Norton Judd, Edwin Standring, James Harwood, William Hudson, John Niel, Joseph Field, Robert Stoney, Andrew Anderson, Prime Coleman, George Coleman, Riley Judd, William Sharp, William Van Dyke, Oscar Taylor, Mrs. Ann Taylor, Henry McConnell, Mrs. James W. Taylor, Emma Evans, Margaret and Elizabeth Zimmerman, Emma Lawrence, Lydia Karren and William Burgess, Jr.

MRS. JAMES W. TAYLOR.

On the 16th of February, 1855, William Burgess, Jr., appeared before the City Council and secured a license for the Lehi Dramatic Club for one year free of charge.

The first productions given were "Priestcraft in Danger" and "Luke the Laborer," the performances being held in the log school house. Tallow candles were used for foot lights, and wagon covers, painted with charcoal and red paint—the latter from the hills above Lehi—formed the scenery and drop curtain.

The Dramatic Company was very popular with the people, and these initial ventures were succeeded by many admirable performances, much to the delight and pleasure of the hardship-ridden pioneers.

THE MEETING HOUSE.

Since, in the late fall and winter of 1855, the people had a great deal of spare time, it was proposed by Bishop Evans that work be commenced on a meeting house. The suggestion met with instant favor, and preparations were accordingly made for the construction of such a building. A committee was appointed to take charge of the matter—Daniel S. Thomas, chairman, and James Harwood, assessor and collector, are the only ones of this committee now known—and a tax of $1.50 for every $100 valuation levied, $1 to be paid in labor and fifty cents to be paid in grain.

MRS. ISABELL JUDD.

Men were sent into West Canyon to obtain logs, and others busied themselves with hauling rocks and making adobes, and soon the masons were busy putting in the foundations and erecting the walls. The logs were hauled to Alpine and sawed into boards, except a few of the best which were reserved for shingles. The house was not completed the first season, but was used in an unfinished condition and has, in fact, never yet been formally dedicated.

The corner selected for the Meeting House was the intersection of the two principal streets of the city, now First South and Second West Streets. This placed the building approximately in the center of the old fort.

The church is sixty feet long by forty feet wide, and sixteen feet high to the square, with a gable at each end. The main auditorium is forty-eight by thirty-six feet, and with the gallery which extends across one end has a capacity of about five hundred. In the attic are two rooms which have been used as school rooms, and for quorum meetings, City Council meetings, and prayer meetings.

The old structure has been used for a variety of purposes during the nearly sixty years of its existence; it is still in active use; and bids fair yet to have many years of service. Superseding the old log school house, it was used for a long time for schools, balls, parties, theatres, and municipal meetings, not to mention its employment as a house of worship. Celebrations, conventions, business meetings, and almost every other kind of assemblage, religious, political, educational, industrial, and social, have been held within its walls. In short, like as in Puritan days, the Meeting House has been the center of the life and growth of the community, and is a mute witness of its struggles, vicissitudes, hardships, suffering, happiness and success. During the so-called "Move," it sheltered at least twenty families. Within its portals have the last sad rites been paid to more than one of Lehi's children, and from its doors have been borne to rest upon the lonely hillside the dear ones of the best families in the city. Truly, the Meeting House, interesting old structure that it is, is entwined around the very heart strings of the people of Lehi.

CHOIRS.

The "Divine Art" was not forgotten by the pioneers of Lehi any more than the others. Even before the organization of a ward, David Clark led the singing in the assemblies, but no organized effort is known before 1852. In this year, William Hudson organized and led the first choir. Among the singers who assisted him in the old log school house and Meeting House were David Clark, Samuel Jones, Edward W. Edwards, John Wield, James Harwood, Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Folkner, William Sharp, Martha Clayton, William Littlewood, Mrs. Littlewood, Annie Brown, and others.

EDWARD W. EDWARDS,
Choir Leader and Hand Cart Veteran.

During the Christmas holidays the good old English custom of serenading was enjoyed, but with the passing years it has almost died out.

JOHN L. GIBB.

Some of the later leaders of the choir are Edward W. Edwards, James P. Carter, Isaac W. Fox, John L. Gibb, E. Beesley, and Isaac Fox. Under these men the choir has always taken an active part in the life of the city, participating in celebrations, exercises, programs, meetings and funerals, and in bringing good cheer and comfort in numerous other ways to the people. Indeed, it has been the choir that has formed the nucleus of musical development in Lehi. At various times its high state of proficiency in music has been demonstrated by its success in winning contests, some of them State-wide.

FIRST PUBLIC LIBRARY.

As early as 1854, the City Council of Lehi had appropriated $70.00 for the purpose of founding a public library. The impetus was not sufficient, however, and the matter was not agitated again until 1865. Largely through the efforts of Israel Evans, a stock company was then organized for the purpose of establishing and operating a library, the members subscribing at $5.00 a share. The company was organized under the following grant of the Legislature:

An act to incorporate the Lehi Library Association.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah: That Israel Evans, William H. Winn, Canute Peterson, James W. Taylor, and William S. S. Willes and their associates and successors in office are hereby constituted a body corporate, to be known and styled as Lehi Library Association; and shall have power to purchase, receive and hold property real and personal; to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended in all courts of law and equity; and to do all or anything that may be proper to carry into effect the object of the association by establishing a library of books, maps, charts, and scientific instruments, connecting therewith a reading room and lectures, and the above named persons are hereby constituted a board of directors of said association, until superseded as provided in the following section.

Section 2. A board of five directors shall be elected by the members of the said association on the first Monday in March, 1866, and annually thereafter on said day, who shall hold the offices for one year and until their successors are duly elected; and they shall have power to appoint a president, secretary, corresponding secretary, treasurer, and librarian, and define their duties; and also to enact such by-laws as may be necessary to do all business of the association. A majority may form a quorum to do business and fill any vacancy in the board, until the next regular election.

Section 3. This association may raise means by sale of shares and contributions and donations for the purchase of books, maps, charts, etc., and for leasing or erecting of suitable buildings for library, reading room, and lecture.

Section 4. Conditions of membership, admission to the library, reading room, and lecture, and the loaning of books or other property, shall be as provided by the by-laws of the said association.

Approved December 27, 1865.

For this library there was purchased Harper's Family Library, consisting of one hundred fifty volumes of uniform size and binding. In addition, the collection contained histories, biographies, and scientific works, but no novels.

INTERIOR OF MEETING HOUSE.

(Looking toward Stand.)

The library was first opened in the small room in the Meeting House, with Joseph J. H. Colledge as librarian. A small fee was charged for the use of the books, and as literature was very scarce, they were in constant use. It is related that a lecture was held once a week at which time the people would draw out their books for the succeeding week, and it is said also that very few volumes were allowed to remain in the library during the meantime.

ISAAC W. FOX.

After the organization of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association, the books were turned over to that society. By them a library was opened in the basement of the present City Hall, and a great number of volumes added to the collection. Later, however, the books were divided and for a number of years were not available.

FIFE AND DRUM CORPS.

About 1860 there was organized in Lehi a fife and drum corps which did much to please the people in the following years. Abraham Enough was the prime mover in this organization, and he became its first leader. This post he held for more than a score of years: a familiar figure on public occasions, with his mouth crooked over his fife and his feet keeping time to the strain. Until the brass band was organized, the drum corps was the principal music in all public affairs. From year to year the membership of the band changed until a large part of the male population of the city had seen service in it. It was not until after 1890 that the last remnants of the corps disbanded.

FIRST BRASS BAND.

It was only in 1871 that the first brass band was formed in Lehi, but when the conditions are taken into consideration, that is a sufficiently meritorious accomplishment. In that year, principally through the activity of George William Thurman, such an organization was launched. By agreement, John Beck furnished one-half of the money necessary to secure the instruments. The following were the charter members: Alfred Fox, leader; Isaac Fox, Samuel Taylor, George Beck, Robert Gilchrist, John Beck, Thomas Fowler, Christian Racker, Thomas R. Cutler, David J. Thurman, Joseph Ashton, and Joseph Colledge. These men were enthusiastic workers, and the band soon reached a high stage of proficiency.

ABRAHAM ENOUGH.

LEHI MUSIC HALL.

Soon after the brass band was organized, the members erected the Lehi Music Hall at a cost of $2,500. This building was the first real theatre and dance hall in Lehi. It was located one-half block south of the Central School Building. It was thirty feet by sixty-two feet, with twenty-one feet of the west end used for a stage, and was built of adobes. The stage settings and scenery were the wonder and admiration of the people, and attracted many visitors as well. The drop curtain and some of the scenery were painted by George Kirkham, and the remainder by Kirkham and Lambourne of Salt Lake City. It served well the purpose of furnishing amusement, and was the scene of many notable performances by the Home Dramatic Association, and traveling companies. It enjoyed popular favor until the erection of the Lehi Opera House by Lewis Garff, when it was sold and torn down.

CONCLUSION.

Such a record is sufficient refutation of the charge of ignorance on the part of the founders of the State. When a little city like Lehi, in the face of the almost insurmountable difficulties which beset its founders, can accomplish the advances in education, music, the drama and other lines of culture, that have been shown, there remains little ground for further charges of lack of education and refinement. And to the men and women who accomplished these things too much credit can not be given.

CHAPTER IX.

Frontier Problems.

1856-1858.

THE influx of the pioneers started a continuous flow of immigration from the East. New converts of the Mormon religion were urged to migrate to the Rocky Mountains to affiliate themselves with their co-religionists. The response to this advice taxed to the utmost the facilities of the Church for transportation. Ox teams and horses proved entirely inadequate. To handle the ever-increasing stream of people who desired to go to the "Valley," some additional means was necessary. The hand cart companies came into being to supply this need. Unaided by horses or oxen, thousands of sturdy men and their no less courageous wives crossed the plains after 1856, pulling a small cart which contained all of their possessions. In general, this method of traveling proved highly satisfactory, and to it is due in no small part the steady increase in Utah's population in early times. Like her sister cities, Lehi received part of this hand cart immigration.

HAND CART VETERANS.

The task of crossing the plains with a hand cart is sufficiently noteworthy to deserve more than passing mention. To those noble men and women who made this memorable journey must be accorded praise in boundless measure. Their names should be written indelibly upon the pages of history and cherished always in the hearts of their fellow citizens. Especially do these men and women who came to Lehi by the hand cart method deserve a permanent place in the narration of the city's growth. Their names constitute an honor roll to which their fellows may look with sincere pride and gratitude.

HAND CART DISASTER.

But the hand cart immigration was not without its tragic side. In the fall of 1856, several companies started from the Platte so late that the winter snow caught them when they reached the mountains. They suffered untold hardships from cold, hunger and exposure, and many gave up their lives. To assist them, Brigham Young called for volunteers during the month of October. Many men with teams and provisions responded and went out to meet these ill-fated travelers. A second call brought out the following men from Lehi who, forgetting the extreme vicissitudes which they had been compelled to undergo in the recent past, left their homes to give whatever aid they could to their brothers in distress: John R. Murdock, William H. Winn, Frank Allen, John S. Lott, Jonathan Partridge, and Alonzo D. Rhodes.

MRS. REBECCA PILGRIM GOATES,
A Hand Cart Veteran.

Concerning this incident, John R. Murdock says:

“There were six of us called from Lehi as a second relief party to go and meet the hand cart sufferers. We proceeded as far as the Weber where we met them, and after distributing the supplies we had brought with us, undertook to help them on the road to the valley. Through the falling snow and the chilling blast our progress was necessarily very slow, but by night we had managed to reach the Cottonwood Grove where we camped. Next morning we started to cross the Big Mountain. In going up the mountain in advance of the company, we found the snow becoming deeper and deeper, and when we reached the top, we discovered that it had drifted to a depth of ten or twelve feet. Here we met men and teams who inquired where the men and teams from Provo were. When I told them that they were a long distance back, they proposed to return to their camp. To this proposition I said ‘No’ most emphatically, and told them to go and help bring the immigrant train up, which they finally did.

“Frank Allen and Jonathan Partridge were now sent forward to make fires for the immigrants at their proposed stopping place, while the rest of us worked with all our might to get the train over the mountain. We hitched three yoke of big cattle to each of the two lead wagons, and with a great deal of labor succeeded in getting a trail opened for the hand carts.”

John R. Murdock was a mountaineer of wide experience and unlimited energy, and there is no doubt but that his wise planning and untiring labor saved many lives on that memorable occasion.

BELATED IMMIGRANTS.

No sooner had these men of Lehi helped bring the hand cart companies to safety than they received another call to assist an independent immigration company which was in distress near Fort Bridger. Brigham Young requested Bishop Evans to fit out a relief expedition and proceed to the assistance of the unfortunates with all possible speed. A company of twenty men with teams and ten wagons provided with provisions and feed was the response. The captain of these men was Joseph Skeens and some of his companions were Alonzo D. Rhodes, Abraham Brown, Samuel Cousins, Newal A. Brown, Riley Judd, Henry McConnell, Paulinas H. Allred, and William Dawson.

This company left Lehi on December 10. On account of the great drifts of snow which they encountered in the mountains, they could travel only with great difficulty and but very slowly. Finally, however, they reached Fort Bridger and found the immigrants on the verge of starvation. Their provisions were exhausted and their teams so poor that they could not continue their journey. The arrival of the company from Lehi saved them from a most pitiable condition and the possibility of death from starvation.

Now began the return march. More snow had fallen, so the homeward journey was more difficult than ever. It was almost impossible to get the teams through the deep drifts. They arrived at the Big Mountain one day about sundown and found the snow near the top to be about twenty feet deep and so loose and dry that it would not pack. With great exertion, Captain Skeens crawled to the top, and to his great joy found a company of men camped on the other side. When he told them the condition of his expedition, they came at once to the rescue. Hitching together four yoke of oxen, they drove them over the top of the mountain down through the snowdrifts to the first wagon. This they pulled back to the top while its team in turn helped bring the second wagon. In this way the trail was opened, and the company passed safely over.

The expedition encountered no further trouble and reached home in safety, having traveled about three hundred and thirty miles over the mountains in fifteen days. The cold had been so severe that every member of the party had fingers or toes frost bitten.

AN EXPLORING TRIP. .

Besides the work of assisting others who were in distress, the pioneers of Utah often made trips of exploration into adjoining parts of the Rocky Mountain region. Several such expeditions went out from Lehi. In April, 1857, Bishop Evans, William Fotheringham and John Brown, upon the invitation of Brigham Young, joined a party which he and Heber C. Kimball were organizing to explore the country in the north. The company was made up of picked men from the various towns, together with a few women, Bishop

Evans' wife, Ann, being one of the number. Leaving Salt Lake City April 24, 1857, they traveled north into the trackless plains and mountain ranges of Idaho, until they arrived at Fort Limhi, a Mormon settlement. Bishop Evans, William Fotheringham and John Brown, upon the invitation of Brigham Young, joined a party which he and Heber C. Kimball were organizing to explore the country in the north. The company was made up of picked men from the various towns, together with a few women, Bishop ment on Salmon River. The company reached Utah again, May 26.

WHITE MOUNTAIN MISSION.

Upon his return from Idaho, Bishop Evans was called to explore the White Mountains and Beaver Valley. With him went Richard Bee, William W. Taylor, John Norton, William Skeens, Dr. Williams, Thomas Randall, and James Harwood. The latter gives an account of the trip:

“With some of the men riding horseback and others taking their ox teams, and equipped with provisions to last several months, we started some time in June, going south to the present site of Beaver, thence west. Through groves of trees, many of which were cut down by the beavers for their dams, we followed down the river to a large spring, issuing from a black rock, which we named Black Rock Spring. Here we camped and plowed a ditch, taking the water from the spring for irrigation purposes, because we intended to locate a settlement.

MRS. HENRY SIMMONDS,
A Hand Cart Veteran.

“A tribe of Indians camped with us, made themselves quite at home, and enjoyed our rations exceedingly. After a few days, the Bishop took a small party of men and explored the White Mountain country. After being at the spring about a month, we received orders from Church headquarters to abandon the idea of making a settlement and to return home. The Indians were quite disappointed at our departure.”

SALMON RIVER EXPEDITION.

In the spring of 1858, contingencies arose which made necessary the sending out of an expedition from Lehi for still another purpose—this time to assist in the defense of a colony which had been attacked by the Indians. Early on the morning of March 8 the signal drum hurriedly called the men of Lehi to the Meeting House. There they learned that volunteers were needed to rescue the colonists in Fort Limhi, on the Salmon River, in Idaho. Two men had been killed and five others wounded by the Indians, and the savages had driven away most of the cattle. A number of men volunteered to go upon this dangerous and difficult expedition. They were: Captain Sidney Willes, Abram Hatch, Henry Norton, John Glynes, Riley Judd, James Lamb, William Skeens, David Skeens, William Dawson, Newal A. Brown, Benjamin Cutler, Frank Molen, Wesley Molen, Henry McConnell, Andrew Anderson, David Taylor, Samuel Cousins, Oley Ellingson, Joseph A. Thomas, George Merrell, Israel Evans, William H. Winn, George Barber and possibly others.

Making only the scantiest and most necessary preparations, the company left Lehi at noon of the day upon which the call came. At Ogden they joined the remainder of the expedition, which consisted of 200 men with Colonel Cunningham in command. The party left Ogden on March 11. Their way led through Malad, Blackfoot, up Snake River, across Shanghi plains to the head of the Salmon, and down that stream to Fort Limhi. They arrived at their destination March 23. The hardships of this journey can only be appreciated when all of the conditions are considered. The men were but scantily clothed. Many of them wore mocassins. Nearly all were without overcoats.

JENS HOLM,
A Hand Cart Veteran.

Underwear made of wagon cover was quite common. With such clothing the men were but barely able to resist the intense cold and the biting north wind which had blown constantly since they had left Ogden. The plains they traversed were covered with snow, in many places drifted to great depths. In addition, the trail led through dangerous canyons and over equally dangerous ice-bound rivers. On every side was the constant menace of the savage redskins who viewed with great disfavor the march of the "pale faces" into their domains. Truly it required men of courage and purpose to make such a journey.

Newal A. Brown, the only survivor of this expedition in Lehi, relates the following:

"We found the fort surrounded by a high stockade which gave the people ample protection so long as they remained inside. It was while they were out gathering the stock which the Indians had stolen that the men were killed. Soon after our men entered the fort, a party of eight Indians came in, not knowing we were there. The gates were quickly closed, and we captured five of the redskins. The others scaled the stockade, and with a loud warwhoop dashed down the valley.

NEWAL A. BROWN.

"By the aid of the interpreter we learned from the captives that the main Indian encampment was twenty miles further down the river. Something concerning the nature of the grievances entertained by the Indians we also learned, and one of the captives was dispatched with a message to his tribe that the white men wished to meet his tribesmen next day and have a 'big talk.'

"On going down the river next morning, we found the red men apparently more prepared for war than for peace. They were lying in ambush in a large cotton grove awaiting developments, the spokesman and a few braves being the only ones in view. We formed a line on the edge of the grove and immediately entered into negotiations by means of the interpreter, on the one hand, and the Indian spokesman on the other. Both men seemed eminently well qualified for the contest, and for some time a wordy warfare waged. The Indian, an excellent specimen of his race, was on a white horse which he rode around and behind our boys, gesticulating with his arms as he talked loudly and rapidly. Finally the tone of the savage became more docile, and on hearing an occasional approving grunt from among the trees, it grew to be quite friendly. We learned that the mountaineers, who were hostile toward the Mormons, had poisoned the minds of the Indians and incited them to acts of lawlessness and plunder.

MRS. HANNAH S. BONE,
A Hand Cart Veteran.

"After the 'big talk' was over, the savages expressed their regret for the trouble they had caused, and sent out runners to gather all the stolen cattle they could find. Later they made up the number short with Indian ponies. We also traded for a considerable number of buffalo robes, giving one blanket for two robes. These skins helped materially in keeping out the cold on the homeward journey.

"The commander at once dispatched a posse of five men with the news of the treaty to President Young. Indians attacked the men before they reached Utah, and Bailey Lake was killed in the encounter.

"Although against the wishes of the Indians, the settlers immediately prepared to leave the fort, commencing the homeward journey, March 28, 1858. Every vehicle of transportation was loaded to its full capacity with tools, furniture and provisions, and yet a quanty of grain was left at the fort. After helping the colonists start and accompanying them some distance on the way, we increased our speed and preceded them on the journey south.

MRS. JOSEPH BROADBENT,
A Hand Cart Veteran.

“On the way home we called at the old abandoned Fort Hall, and a few days later found the naked body of Bailey Lake. He lay face downward, pinned to the earth with five arrows. We dug a grave, held a funeral service, and laid away the remains of this unfortunate man, with all the honor and respect possible under the circumstances. When we reached Utah early in April, we learned that the people in Salt Lake Valley and the valleys in the north had commenced the so-called ‘Move’ to the south.”

CHAPTER X.

The Echo Canyon War.

IT IS necessary now to turn back in the annals of Lehi's history to consider that peculiar and interesting episode—the Echo Canyon War. A discussion of the causes leading up to this unique incident does not belong here, neither is it incumbent to describe the attitude of the Federal government and of the people of the Territory towards each other, except in so far as they affected the growth of the little settlement on Dry Creek. Thus limited, the subject still possesses many features of interest and importance.

A HISTORIC TWENTY-FOURTH.

Ten years had elapsed since the pioneers first set foot in Salt Lake Valley. Prosperity—limited even though it admittedly was—reigned where originally had been found but hardship and suffering. From the first colony on the shores of the salt sea had grown numerous settlements in different parts of the Territory. The people were free from oppression; they lived contentedly and happily. There was reason to rejoice over the substantial progress made and the rosy outlook for the future.

Thus it came about that July 24, 1857, found a joyful celebration under way—the tenth anniversary of the arrival of the pioneers. Most of the people of Salt Lake City had migrated to Silver Lake, a beautiful sheet of water at the head of Big Cottonwood Canyon (now called Brighton). With them, upon invitation of Brigham Young and other Territorial and Church officials, had come the more prominent men from all over Utah. Included in these, by special request, were the members of the exploring party which had journeyed into Idaho a few months previous. And so it was that Lehi was well represented at the historic celebration in the canyon.

The unexpected arrival of Abram O. Smoot, Orrin Porter Rockwell and Judson Stoddard at the height of the celebration, with the startling news that an army of the United States was on its way to Utah, precipitated the most profound astonishment and the most varied speculation as to the outcome. When the news reached Lehi, it was the sole topic of conversation for months. Amid all kinds of rumors and excitement, it was possible to find out practically nothing definite concerning the impending invasion which threatened to have so dubious a result for the people of the Territory. It is easily understood why the men and women of Lehi should become intensely concerned.

In the first place, the invasion by an army of the United States was to their minds wholly unprecedented and unjustified. They were neither aliens seeking to overthrow the government nor subjects in rebellion. Indeed they prided themselves on their loyalty to the Federal Government. They pointed to the fact that one of their first actions in the Territory was to hoist the Stars and Stripes.

Since that time they had universally been at peace except for their spasmodic conflicts with the Indians. Furthermore, they considered they had the right to a presumption of loyalty from their past record. In Lehi were at least thirteen men—George Coleman, James Lemmons, John C. Nagle, Israel Evans, Jesse B. Martin, Ira J. Willes, William S. S. Willes, John R. Murdock, Charles Hopkins, Thomas Karren, Frank Woodward, Joseph Skeens, and Levi Savage—who had faithfully and heroically served their country in the Mormon Battalion. Another—Alfred Bell—had fought in the War of 1812. Numerous families traced their descent from the Revolutionary fathers. Were they not entitled to some consideration and respect as patriotic citizens of the government that was now sending an invading army against them? Such, at least, was their belief. That they should be exceedingly concerned over the violence which threatened is easily understood. Most of them had been victims in some form or other of the persecutions and mobbings of a few years previous in Missouri and Illinois. Also they could not help calling to mind that those mobs had often committed their horrible crimes under the flimsy justification of supposed legality. Can they be blamed for being fearful of a repetition of their former heart-breaking experiences?

But this speculation and discussion eventually took tangible form. Representatives from Lehi attended all the meetings in Salt Lake City in which the question was thoroughly considered. Finally they cor-curred in the decision arrived at, to resist the entrance of the army into the Territory. In addition, the Territorial militia was perfected and prepared to enter the conflict, if necessary. The Lehi military district comprised all of Utah County north of Provo, and was under the supervision of David Evans, who held the rank of major.

CAVALRY.

In September came a call on the Lehi district for a company of cavalry for service in Echo Canyon. Men from all settlements north of the lake made up the number as finally organized. Captain Sidney Willes commanded the party, and among its members could have been noted the following Lehi men: Frank Molen, Wesley Molen, Joseph A. Thomas, Newal A. Brown, William Fotheringham, Riley Judd, William Skeens, George Merrel, David Taylor, John S. Lott, Sylvanus Collett, John Karren, and James Wiley Norton. The work of these volunteers consisted at first only of blocking Echo Canyon against the entrance of the troops. To this end, they constructed barricades and breastworks in the defiles of the mountains, and took all possible measures effectively to impede the progress of the army. Later they joined Captain Lot Smith's company at Ham's Fork, and experienced more active and interesting service. Under the leadership of this resourceful and daring frontiersman, they harassed General Johnston in every conceivable manner. They burned his supply trains; they drove off his horses and mules; they stampeded his cattle; they set the dry grass around him afire;

they irritated and hampered him continuously—but they shed not a drop of blood. All this was accomplished with the most meagre equipment, and a comparatively small force. Indeed, to deceive the enemy, Captain Smith often had his men ride in file around visible hill tops and passes for hours at a stretch, accomplishing by strategy alone what others might have performed only through bloodshed. Often the Territorial recruits were compelled to subsist on a diet of bread and water—the former made from a mixture of flour and water, and baked over an open fire by winding the dough spirally around a stick. When the snow set in, General Johnston established his winter quarters at Fort Bridger, and the volunteer cavalry returned home. A few of the men, under Captain Willes, maintained a kind of patrol in Echo Canyon during most of the winter. Early December saw all the party with this exception safely in Lehi.

INFANTRY.

In the meantime, a company of infantry had also set out from Lehi. Major William Hyde was in command of this expedition, and it carried a full equipment of guns and ammunition and sufficient provisions to last all winter. Major William Hyde, William Clark, James Harwood, Luke Titcomb, Joseph J. Smith, Samuel T. Smith, Joseph Robinson, Edward Cox, Robert Maugh, Preston Thomas, Henry Simmonds, Edward M. Allison, William Hudson, James Commander, and Thomas Ashton made up the roll of volunteers from Lehi.

Some of these reputed infantrymen, were so poorly clad as hardly to deserve the name. Indeed, if their value had depended upon their uniforms at all, rather than upon their dauntless courage and unquestioned bravery, they would have been a sorry band of soldiers. For example, Samuel T. Smith had no shoes until the company arrived in Salt Lake City, and then he procured an old pair from William Clark who in turn bought the only pair in a certain store for sixteen bushels of oats. They were the largest and most ungainly footgear he had ever beheld, but he had to make shift with them or do without. From James Harwood is obtained this account of the campaign:

“In the month of November we started for Weber River, traveling through Emigration Canyon and over the Big Mountain, where the snows of winter were gathering in great drifts. After reaching the Weber, we marched to the mouth of Echo Canyon, where a military camp had already been established. Here we were told to remain and await further orders. Soon afterward, we received word that Johnston’s army was going into winter quarters and that we might return home.

“With much rejoicing we packed our effects and started on our homeward march. While no one thought in the least of deserting, yet we felt at times a little anxious when we considered the object of the campaign. We were going out to meet and attempt to resist one of the best equipped armies of the United States, whose orders were to enter Salt Lake City at any cost. We knew very well that if we ever met that army, some of us might never see our loved ones again.

“About midnight of the first day’s journey homeward, as we were rolled up in our blankets at the foot of Big Mountain, a messenger aroused us with orders to return to our former camp at once, for the Federal army, as supposed, had not gone into permanent quarters for the winter. In spite of a feeling of disappointment, back we tramped through the snow until we reached the main encampment of the Nauvoo Legion, situated near the Overhanging Cliffs in Echo Canyon. The camp presented quite a military appearance with its hundreds of white tents and covered wagons, and as we came marching in, the band played, 'O ye mountains high.'

"We soon became accustomed to the routine work of a military camp, and learned to regulate our actions by the bugle call and the tap of the drum. We had tents and wagons in which to sleep, and each company provided itself with a large 'wickiup,' made of poles placed upright in a circle with their tops together and thatched on the outside with pine boughs. These we used as places in which to spend our leisure time. We had plenty of beef, bread, and beans to eat, so we did not suffer for lack of food. In fact, we all enjoyed ourselves and had a good time.

"One evening we were sitting around the big fire in the 'wickiup,' 'spinning yarns' and singing songs, when a scouting party which had been out in the neighborhood of the army came in. 'Bill' Skeens and Riley Judd had been with them, so we were soon listening to their big stories. They happened to be standing on opposite

the horn. Riley reached across the fire for the receptacle, when to our horror it fell into the flames. The scene that followed can best be imagined, for we lost no time in getting away from the fire and out of the 'wickiup.' We expected to see both men blown to atoms. But the explosion never came. When we finally ventured to look in, there sat Bill and Riley quietly toasting their toes by the fire and in the comfortable seats their little ruse had secured for them.

RILEY JUDD.

“Our time was not all spent in play; we had drill every day, and work with the pick and shovel. At convenient places in the canyon, we dug trenches and constructed breastworks, piled boulders on the heights to be rolled down on the invaders, and made a dam across the canyon to submerge the road. We also stood guard at night, and performed all the other duties of a soldier.

“Scouting parties continued to come in with news from the army and occasionally with prisoners. I recognized one of the men brought as a fellow-passenger on the ship on which I had crossed the Atlantic.

He informed me he had hired out as a teamster, deeming that a good way to reach Salt Lake.

“Finally we received word that the army had definitely gone into winter quarters on Black’s Fork, and orders came early in December to break camp and return home. It did not take long to put this command into execution. With as few stops as possible, after leaving Echo Canyon, we traveled up the Weber, as the snow on the Big Mountain was impassable, and followed the trail to Parley’s Park and down Parley’s Canyon. We ate the last of our provisions and pitched our last camp in this canyon. The snow was so deep that we did not attempt to shovel it away, but made our beds on top of it, and in the morning we found ourselves under another layer. When we arrived at Union Fort, we were invited to the meeting house where a good meal awaited us, and it is needless to say that we did ample justice to the occasion. We reached home the next day a tired, happy lot of men who expected to renew the campaign when spring came.”

THE "MOVE."

The winter of 1857-1858 passed very much as the preceding winters, but underneath the outward feeling of serenity there existed a vague wonder as to the future movements of the army quartered just outside the Territory. During all the months of inactivity, negotiations were carried on between Brigham Young on one hand and General Johnston and the newly-appointed Governor, Alfred Cumming, on the other. The upshot of these communications was hardly satisfactory to either party. At first fearful of allowing the soldiers to enter Salt Lake Valley, the Mormon leaders finally consented to permit them to come in without resistance, upon condition that their commanders pledge the security of the life and property of the people. This both Governor Cumming and General Johnston did. The outcome was unsatisfactory to Brigham Young and his colleagues, because in their minds no necessity existed for the presence of an armed force in Utah, while for the army the occupation meant a mere empty triumph of their policy.

So strong was the distrust of the Utah leaders for the army that they resolved not to leave them any opportunity for depredation. Accordingly, Brigham Young directed all the people north of Utah County to leave their homes and proceed southward. At the same time, he perfected measures whereby sufficient men were left in Salt Lake to set fire to all the houses and chop down all the trees upon the first sign of disorder by the invaders. Thus began the famous “Move” in which Lehi was destined to play so prominent a part.

The spring of 1858 found 30,000 people migrating southward. Day after day the citizens of Lehi saw them pass through their borders, a continuous stream along the State Road, from daylight till dark. A striking picture was this exodus, one long to be remembered—covered wagons laden with all manner of household goods; hand carts; men and women mounted on horses or mules; far more of them walking, often barefoot; cattle, sheep and pigs, singly and in herds; all manner of freak conveyances; no end of confusion, and not a little suffering and sorrow. Added to all the rest was the almost incessant rain which fell during that spring.*

The people of Lehi responded nobly in assisting their unfortunate visitors. Men who could, furnished teams and wagons to help in the transporting of their neighbors from the north. Every home in the little city was thrown open, and each room filled to its capacity; even the Meeting House was placed at the disposal of the refugees. When all available room had been occupied, the men built cabins against the fort wall, and even made dugouts on the vacant lots in the city. But the hardest problem was to provide food for this excessive number. The foodstuffs from the previous crops were brought into requisition, and upon the advice of Bishop Evans many of the people raised vegetables.

John Zimmerman casts an interesting sidelight upon these stirring times:

“During the spring months I kept a team on the road hauling people from the north into Utah Valley. I would make one trip and William Southwick the next. We went to the General Tithing Office in Salt Lake City, where the brethren in charge gave us a load of people and their belongings, which we brought to Utah County and left in whatever town they wished to stop. We continued in this way until the last family was moved. Between these trips we planted our crops, although we scarcely had hopes of ever harvesting them.

“I well remember the bishop counseling us to raise potatoes, and it would have been better for me if I had followed his advice. I had six or seven acres of land which I intended planting in corn, but I gave different men parts of it until there remained but one acre and a half. In this small piece I planted corn which came up nicely, grew rapidly, and gave promise of a bounteous harvest. But early in July a severe frost came and utterly destroyed it. Not so with the potatoes; the frost did no further damage than to set them back a little, and when the harvest came, the potato crop was a bumper. I have never seen larger or better potatoes than those raised that season."

PEACE COMMISSIONERS IN LEHI.

After the people had migrated south, negotiations continued between Brigham Young and the Federal officials who had been sent out. At first they bore no fruit, but finally two additional commissioners arrived from the East, met Brigham Young at Salt Lake City, and after holding a meeting in Provo, came to Lehi on June 17. These men were Governor L. W. Powell, of Kentucky, and Major Ben McCullough of Texas. They called an open-air mass meeting near Bishop Evans' residence, and addressed the gathering in the hope of conciliating them. They promised that the people should not be molested by the army, in fact that it should be quartered a reasonable distance from their homes; they affirmed that full amnesty had been granted by the President of the United States for whatever fancied wrongs the people of the Territory had committed; and finally they promised that all difficulties should be amicably settled. Their pleas were not in vain. Their auditors took them at their word and accepted the proposals of peace. The meeting was followed by great enthusiasm and no less intense gratitude that the affair should have so fortunate a termination. The next two months—July and August—saw all the people back in their homes, and the danger of any further conflict averted.

CAMP FLOYD.

General Johnston's troops passed through Salt Lake City on June 26, and assumed permanent quarters immediately afterward at Camp Floyd in Cedar Valley, eighteen miles west of Lehi. Their near proximity to the town had a most salutary effect upon it. The shrewd farmers of Lehi were not slow to sense the market for their food products which the garrison furnished. Immediately there sprang up a brisk trade with the soldiers in grains, vegetables, eggs, dairy products, squash pies, and fodder. Two dollars were often paid for a bushel of grain or potatoes, and hay and straw readily sold for twenty-five or thirty dollars a ton. For the people, Thomas Taylor acted as agent in these commercial transactions with the soldiers, and in this way began his career as a merchant. John Zimmerman invested the first profit from his grain in a threshing machine, and with this was able to take several contracts with the soldiers to furnish grain. In addition to the purchase of food-stuffs, the camp was profitable to Lehi because it furnished employment for many of its laborers. Wood must be cut in the canyons, hauled to Camp Floyd, and corded for firewood. The new quarters must be erected, so carpenters were in demand. Adobe-making also proved to be a profitable occupation, since many of the barracks were constructed from this material. In payment for their goods and their work, the people received many needed articles which the soldiers were able to supply. Horses, mules, harnesses, wagons, and other equipment and implements soon passed from Camp Floyd to the city and found immediate and profitable use.

This trade continued until July, 1861, when, by order from Washington, Camp Floyd was abandoned and the equipment sold. It is estimated that $400,000.00 worth of government stores were purchased by people in the Territory at a valuation not to exceed three per cent. Part of this, Lehi men secured. Notable among these newly acquired things were the large wagon boxes which came to be used as bins for storing grain; the soldiers' overcoats with capes which were worn extensively; the wide-strapped government harness; and cannon balls which John Zimmerman utilized for casting machinery. John C. Nagle purchased the fort building for seventy-five dollars, and the wood was sufficient to last the city for building purposes for some years.

JOHN C. NAGLE.

On the whole, the Echo Canyon war proved to be a benefit to Lehi rather than a detriment. While grave apprehension existed at first as to the effect of such an invasion, later events proved that it was groundless. Aside from the temporary inconvenience of affording shelter to the unfortunates who came in the "Move"—which to the kindhearted people of Lehi was truly a labor of love—the city suffered no appreciable ill effects from the so-called war. Furthermore, the establishment of Camp Floyd benefited Lehi more than any other town in the Territory. It furnished countless badly needed articles and offered an excellent market for the disposal of surplus products of the farm. Whatever punishment, therefore, was contemplated in the sending of an army to Utah, resulted, at least in so far as Lehi was concerned, not in harm, but in immense good.

CHAPTER XI.

Church Immigration.

1860-1868.

THE year 1860 saw the arrival of the last hand cart companies in Utah. Henceforth immigrants came in trains of "prairie schooners" drawn by oxen. To assist this trans-continental travel, Brigham Young began the practice of sending expeditions out from Utah, fully equipped, to transport numbers of the waiting immigrants from Florence, Nebraska, which was the starting point of Church migration, over the plains to the Rockies. It grew to be a common practice for men to be called from the different towns in Utah to accompany these trains; indeed, it was generally regarded as missionary work. During a period of eight or nine years, until 1868, Lehi furnished her share of men and equipment for the carrying out of this plan. Each summer a little company from the settlement, which itself had only been established ten years, set out for the Missouri to assist others in their journey west. Those who remained at home helped the expedition by furnishing provisions and adding to the equipment of the outfit. Above all others, John R. Murdock was active in this work. He made five different trips to the East as captain of immigration trains, and assisted hundreds of men and women to reach Utah.

FIRST EXPEDITION.

The first of these immigration expeditions in which Lehi men participated set out in April, 1861. It consisted of two hundred wagons with four yoke of oxen to each wagon, and a cargo of fifty thousand pounds of flour. At night the wagons were placed in a circle, thus forming an enclosure for the cattle. After each stop the drivers had the not inconsiderable task of selecting their eight oxen from the herd and hitching them to the wagon before a start could be made. On the return trip, eight to twelve persons were assigned to each wagon. Some of them walked and some rode, but the driver walked always.

On this journey John R. Murdock was captain of one of the four companies into which the whole expedition was divided. Thomas Karren, George McConnell, John E. Ross, Martin B. Bushman, and Albert Goodwin constituted Lehi's quota to the personnel of the party, in addition to which the city furnished five wagons, forty oxen, and five thousand pounds of flour. Captain Murdock's company arrived in Salt Lake City September 12, 1861, having made the whole journey in four and one-half months.

CROSSING THE PLAINS.

In continuance of the policy begun the year before, the Church sent, in May, 1862, 262 wagons, 293 men, 2,800 oxen, and 143,315 pounds of flour to the Missouri River to assist poor immigrants in their trip to Utah. Lehi sent the following men this summer: John R. Murdock, captain; John Woodhouse, commissary; Edwin Standring, Joseph Ashton, Peter Brown, George Murdock, John Bushman, and Daniel W. Thomas. With the company was also Newal A. Brown, who was on his way east to buy merchandise for John C. Nagle. An interesting account of this journey is given by John Woodhouse:

"The year 1862 is known as the high water year, and it was with difficulty that we could make our way through the mountains on account of the deep snow. In some places it was necessary to take the wagons apart and carry them along the mountain side to avoid the heavy drifts in the bottom of the canyons.

"About May 1 we started, and made our way up Emigration Canyon, where Daniel W. Thomas overturned his wagon in trying to get through a snow bank. At Yellow Creek the water was overflowing the banks, and it entirely surrounded the bridge. When one-half of the company had crossed over, the road had become so cut up that it was impossible to reach the bridge. Having obtained permission to tear down a log stable near by, we decided with the logs obtained from it to build a bridge farther up the creek, where the banks were steeper.

EDWIN STANDRING.

We found, however, that the logs were too short to span the creek, and we were about to abandon the project when I suggested the splicing of two logs together with our log chains. Everyone ridiculed the idea at first, but it was found to be practicable when we tried it. Accordingly, we built the bridge successfully and passed over in safety.

across. An immigrant train, bound for the west, was camped on the east bank of the river, and some of the men had watched us work. As we were leaving, one of them said, 'Well, boys, you beat all I've ever seen to cross rivers. If you will take our outfits over, we will pay you ten dollars per wagon.' The young man ahead of me replied, 'No, by h—, we don't work like this for money.'

"We found Green River much swollen, and the

"The water at Ham's Fork was overflowing the banks and submerging the bridge, which as a result was in danger of being washed away. After fastening it with chains, we succeeded in getting our wagons over by hand and swimming our animals across the stream. It took us two and one-half days to get our train completely valley flooded with water, especially on the east side. We ferried the wagons over, and after several attempts, succeeded in swimming the cattle across.

“At the Sandy we saw the place where Captain Lot Smith had burned the government trains during the ‘Utah War.’ The circle was markd by bits of burned wood, pieces of iron, and other debris. As I gazed upon the spot, a verse of an old song drifted into my mind:

“‘We’ll hang each man that’s got two wives,
We’ve got the ropes right handy,
That is to say, we had, you know;
But Smith burned ’em, out on Sandy.’

“We arrived in Florence July 9, and remained there until the 24th of the month, which gave our cattle a much-needed rest. Our allotment of immigrants was about seven hundred, which, with the supply of bacon, groceries, and a quantity of freight, made up the loads for the homeward journey. I had seventeen immigrants and three tents to my wagon. As the captain desired me to deal out provisions, we made an inventory and agreed on rations. The first evening I distributed flour, bacon, sugar, tea, coffee and rice, according to the number in each family. Then I appointed a day for dealing out flour, another day for bacon, and another for groceries. This plan worked very well, and did not hinder us from traveling at a fairly good speed.*

*Woodhouse was continually bothered by the ignorance of many of the foreign immigrants in regard to frontier life. One of their greatest difficulties was in making a fire. To avoid this trouble, Woodhouse finally explained the proper way of build-

“We left Florence, July 24, and arrived in Salt Lake City, September 27, 1862, the second Church train of the season.”

FURTHER AID TO IMMIGRATION.

The following letter from the Presiding Bishop's Office to Bishop Evans reflects the spirit of the times, and is self-explanatory:

Bishop David Evans, Lehi, Utah.

Dear Brother: In view of the increasing anxiety of our leaders to assist the poor from the Old and New Worlds, coupled with the warmest desire to get them here, we are prompted to make an extra effort this year to bring them hither; and to carry out such design, we will be obliged to fit out and equip at least five hundred teams to bring them from Florence.

In proportioning these teams among the Territorial wards, your ward will be expected to furnish eight ox or mule teams (four or six mules or four yoke of oxen to each team) an equal number of good and trusty teamsters, and one mounted guard, armed and equipped for a four or five months' journey, with clothing, provisions, ammunition, ferriage means, ox or mule shoes, spades, axes, picks, ropes, augers, saws, etc., for down and back trips, without the expectation of receiving any assistance from any other source.

As sacks and sacking are scarce, you will have to make boxes to put the flour in, for the poor on the road. Each team will be expected to have sufficient boxes to carry at least one thousand pounds of flour for this purpose.

The flour and grain must be brought to this city, and a full and detailed report made to us of the amount of flour for the poor, number of teams, etc., so that a settlement can be made with you after their return in the fall.

ing a camp fire to an Englishman, telling him that he must avoid green wood, that when branches had leaves on they would not do, they were too green to burn. The Englishman gravely said: “Well, I can soon pull them bits of things off.”

The teams are expected to leave this city about the 25th of April next, and will have to be such as will bear inspection before starting.

The captain assigned to take charge of your teams is Peter Nebeker, of Mill Creek, this county, who will as soon as possible put himself in communication with you.

Your Brethren in the Gospel,
 EDWARD HUNTER,
 L. W. HARDY,
 J. C. LITTLE.

In response to this call, the following Lehi men made the trip in Captain Nebeker's company: William Bone, Jno. W. Wing, Jacob Cox, Byron W. Brown, Squire Reynolds, Heber Oakey and Henry Wedge. John R. Murdock was in command of another Church train this year, and Daniel W. Thomas accompanied him as teamster. The trip to Florence and return was made without any unusual difficulty. Only one death occurred, and that was by lightning. Captain Nebeker's company reached Salt Lake City September 25, 1863.

THOMAS R. JONES.

LATER IMMIGRATION EXPEDITIONS.

Owing to the Civil War and the consequent light immigration, only a few Church trains left Utah in 1864. William Ball, William L. Hutchings, Gideon Murdock and Jack Ewing were the only men from Lehi to go east this year.

At this point it might be an interesting digression to note practically the only effect the Civil War had upon the life of the community. The conflict had caused the depreciation of paper to a great extent. Greenbacks were negotiable at only half their value. In recognition of this, the City Council this year passed an ordinance which doubled the toll rates on the Jordan River bridge.

Thomas R. Jones, Alfred Fox, Thomas F. Trane, John Worlton, Nels Downs, William Simmonds, Christian Nelson, and James Dawson made up the contingent in the Church trains of 1866. Their journey was marred only by the theft of a hundred oxen, which the Indians succeeded in driving off. Upon receipt of the news of this loss, which came by overland telegraph, Brigham Young sent out a relief expedition to meet the party. Newal A. Brown accompanied this latter company. With the assistance thus obtained, the westbound train arrived safely, and in about the usual time.

The last Church immigration trains left Utah in the spring of 1868, as after that year it was possible to come by rail to Ogden. Accompanying the expedition this time were Paulinas H. Allred, Thomas Fowler, Joseph Evans, Benjamin S. Lott, George Zimmerman, John Peterson, and Joseph W. Goates. John R. Murdock, as usual, had charge of a company of fifty wagons.*

Such is the extent of the assistance the little town of Lehi was able to give its neighbors. It had been established but fifteen years, and its people had been compelled to undergo hardships and privations of the most severe nature. Any aid rendered to the outside was done only at a tremendous sacrifice. In spite of all these difficulties, it is safe to say that no town in the whole Territory rendered more effective succor to needy immigrants than did Lehi. It is a record of which the city can well be proud.

*This company encountered the Union Pacific Railway which was then being built westward. Some of the men had never seen a locomotive before. Among this number was Paulinas H. Allred, who, upon first sight of the steel monster, stood fixed with amazement. A railroad man, seeing his wonderment, thought to ridicule him and said, "Where were you raised that you have never seen a railroad?" "Sir," said Allred, "I was always ahead of them."

CHAPTER XII.

Growth of the Community.

I N history the things of most permanent value are generally accomplished with the least display of pomp and ostentation. It is quiet, commonplace things which have done most to advance the race in civilization. Always the warrior has been a fascinating figure and the laborer ordinary and uninteresting, yet nations have been infinitely more benefited by the effective work of the toilers than by the carnage and destruction of the man of arms. The growth of our own country has been due to the character of its citizens as expressed in economic and political life far more than to that character expressed in the clash of weapons. In terms of ultimate value, the most ordinary things are often also the most important. What is true of race and nation applies with equal correctness to the city. Hence the growth of Lehi is a result, not so much of the spectacular incidents, as of the ordinary commonplace, uninteresting—yet, withal, effective and valuable—events in the life of its people.

The decade between 1859 and 1869 is a period of rapid growth in the life of the city on Dry Creek. Developing from a little settlement, Lehi assumed during this time the aspect of a town. No remarkable events occurred; nothing wonderful happened; the consistent, unceasing work of the people was responsible for the advance. True it is that a variety of other things must receive mention during this period; but in their narration the real cause of development—the unrelenting toil of the men and women of Lehi—must be kept in mind.

MULLINER'S MILL.

When conditions had become practically normal again, in 1858, Samuel Mulliner set in operation the grist mill which he had been constructing the last two years. When completed, it was one of the best in the Territory. Previously the farmers had taken their grain to the mouth of American Fork Canyon or to Salt Lake County. The miller was Elisha H. Davis; he had previously lived in Lehi and been a member of the City Council, but had moved away; now at the request of Mulliner he returned to operate the newly erected mill. This structure stood near the present site of the sugar factory, the "Mill Pond" having been built for furnishing power. The mill continued in operation until the site was sold by Thaddeus Powell to the Utah Sugar Company.

FOURTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

On account of the unsettled condition of affairs incident to the Echo Canyon War, no election had been held in 1858. The previous city officials continued to serve until an election could be observed, namely, Monday, February 14, 1859. On this date, with the Tithing Office as the scene of the election and with Ezekiel Hopkins, William Hyde, and William Fotheringham as judges and Thomas Taylor as clerk, the people chose the following men to be their civic leaders: Mayor, David Evans; Aldermen, Lorenzo H. Hatch, Israel Evans, James Taylor and Alfred Bell; Councilors, Abel Evans, Canute Peterson, Thomas Ashton, Thomas Karren, Daniel S. Thomas, Alonzo P. Raymond, William W. Taylor, John W. Norton, and William S. S. Willes.

The new coterie of officers made these appointments: Recorder, Thomas Taylor; Marshal, Alonzo D. Rhodes; Treasurer and Supervisor, Canute Peterson; Sealer of Weights and Measures, James Harwood; Water Master, Thomas Ashton; Constables, James Harwood and John Zimmerman; School Trustees, Daniel S. Thomas, Thomas Karren, and John W. Norton; Examiners, Thomas Taylor, Alfred Bell, and David Taylor; Field Committee, Israel Evans, Canute Peterson, and Alonzo P. Raymond.

The last named committee was one of that extensive system of offices which the early city fathers deemed essential to the successful maintenance of the Resolved by the City Council of the City of Lehi: That it is the privilege, and is hereby made the duty of the said Field Committee, to measure off to each individual holding land in said field, a lot of fence equal in length to value of his or her lands in dollars and cents, and in a principle of equity and justice as near as may be according to the judgment of said committee.

Resolved: That it shall be the duty of each person holding or claiming land in said field, at any time when called upon by said committee, to furnish and cause to be set, according to the directions of said committee, a stake with the owner of said fence written legibly thereon, to be eighteen inches in the ground and twelve inches above, squaring at least two inches at the top, at the end of his or her fence, thus allotted by said committee.

Resolved: That when a lot or parcel of fence is awarded to any person by said committee, it shall be and is hereby made the duty of such person or persons, to see that such fence is in good repair and ever after keep the same in good repair, according to the order of the City Council or this committee.

Resolved: That it shall hereafter be the duty of any person or persons conveying or in any way transferring lands or fence in or around said field, to stake as before provided and report the same to the Field Committee, that a true record of such transfers may be kept.

Resolved further: That any person violating any of the foregoing resolutions shall be liable to a fine in any sum not exceeding one hundred dollars for every such violation or neglect of duty, also liable to all damages that may be sustained by such violation or neglect.

These resolutions to be in force from and after their publication.

INTRODUCTION OF ALFALFA.

The first alfalfa seed was brought to Lehi by Isaac Goodwin. A member of Captain Samuel Brannan's company, he sailed in the "Brooklyn" around Cape Horn and landed in California, in 1846. With others, he was working on the mill race at Sutter's Mill when gold was discovered, resulting in the mad rush to the Golden Gate from all parts of the world. Goodwin arrived in Lehi from the Pacific Coast in February, 1859, bringing with him a little of the precious alfalfa seed. At first he remained at Cold Springs, on the west side of the Jordan River, but later he moved into the city, locating permanently on the southeast corner of Fourth West and Main.

In the spring of 1860, Goodwin planted the first alfalfa seed that Utah soil had known. From his seeds only seven plants sprouted. These he nourished tenderly until they yielded him more. This in turn he planted the following spring, caring for it with all possible patience. Continuing this process for a number of years, and cleaning the husks from the seeds by means of a coffee grinder, he was able at last to sell a little seed to his neighbors for one dollar a pound, which, indeed, scarce paid for the cleaning.* In a few years the seed had become quite generally distributed, and lucern has now become the staple forage crop of the west. Paulinas H. Allred, in 1867, put up the first stack of lucern hay in Lehi.

WORK ON THE POINT OF THE MOUNTAIN.

Up to 1860 the road at the Point of the Mountain had been excessively steep and difficult of travel. Higher up on the hill than at present, it presented a serious inconvenience to travelers on the State Road. To allay this difficulty, Brigham Young requested the towns in the north end of Utah County to assist him in repairing the road. Sixty-one men responded from Lehi, and performed altogether two hundred seventy days of work.

The Yankee spirit of fun is irrepressible. No matter what the time or place, your real American loves a good joke. Of this company at work at the Point of the Mountain, this was indeed true. One would think that the sobering effect of hardship and trouble would have completely banished any desire for humor in the pioneers of Lehi; but such was far from being the case—there was an exceptionally large number of mischief makers here.

One evening a crowd of the younger men disguised themselves as Indians and sent two of their complotters into the camp of the older men. Joining them at the camp fire, they adroitly steered the conversation around to the Indians. In turn they related incidents of ever increasing horror, until they reached the story of an Indian massacre which had occurred on the very spot where the camp was pitched. This narration lacked no embellishment of gruesome detail and blood-curdling description. Finally one of the young men asked what the others would do in case of a repetition of the alleged Indian attack. Bravely the elders announced that it would unquestionably be the proper thing to hold one's ground, to fight,—any other course would be inconceivable. Suddenly a fearful noise was heard near by; it approached the fire with wonderful rapidity; the din grew ever louder until the hair-raising Indian war whoop could be only too clearly distinguished. It needed but a single glimpse to verify what had been heard—there in all their war paint was a band of Indians, hostile, bloodthirsty, menacing. Instantly the veterans forgot their recent advice and with reckless haste fled in all directions from the fire. One even ran into Lehi—a good six miles—and in his awful fright told the people that the whole company had been massacred by the red men and that he was the sole survivor. Some of the citizens were considerably agitated, but when the news reached Bishop Evans, he—shrewd Yankee that he was—inquired the names of the party from Lehi, and upon mention of a few of the worst jokers, he knew that the supposed massacre was solved.

FIFTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

February 11, 1861, was the date of the fifth election in Lehi. The result follows: Mayor, John R. Murdock; Aldermen, James W. Taylor, William Snow, John W. Norton, and William Fotheringham; Councilors, Thomas Ashton, William S. S. Willes, John C. Nagle, John Zimmerman, Henry Norton, J. B. Martin, Hugh Hilton, William Clark, and Abraham Losee.

The council entered upon its duties February 27, and appointed Joseph J. H. Colledge as Recorder. Later it made the remaining appointments: Marshal, John S. Lott; Assessor and Collector, James Harwood; Treasurer, Abram Hatch; Water Master, Thomas Ashton; Supervisor, John Zimmerman; Pound Keeper, William Clark; Sealer of Weights and Measures, William S. S. Willes; Superintendent of Lost and Found, Stephen H. Pierce; Field Committee, Charles Partridge, Thomas Karren, and George Coleman; Building Committee, Thomas Ashton, William S. S. Willes, and John W. Norton; Examiners, Abram Hatch, James W. Taylor, and William Fotheringham; Sexton, John W. Norton; Captain of Police, James Wiley Norton.

Various changes in this list of officers were made to meet conditions. Alderman James W. Taylor acted as Mayor pro tempore during the summer months while Mayor John R. Murdock was absent assisting Church immigrant trains from the Missouri to Utah. On April 27, Councilor William Clark was promoted to the office of Alderman to fill a vacancy left by William Fotheringham, who had gone on a mission to Africa. Paulinas H. Allred took Clark's vacated place. William Snow assumed William Fotheringham's duties on the Board of Examiners. Charles Barnes succeeded Stephen H. Pierce as Superintendent of Lost and Found, the latter having vacated the office because of infirmity. William Goates was made a Councilor, on November 10, to succeed Hugh Hilton, who had gone on a mission.

Upon assuming the reins of government, the fifth City Council determined to make an investigation of all property owned by the municipality. The committee on revenue, after making a most painstaking inquiry, reported through its chairman, John C. Nagle, that the city's wealth consisted of three small drums and one large one, and stated further that all stood very much in need of repair.

On April 27, 1861, the council received a numerously signed petition asking that the city be enlarged. This unmistakable sign of growth occasioned much discussion. For one, Bishop Evans seriously objected to any such extension of the city, giving as his reason the lack of water in Dry Creek to supply any considerable addition to the population of Lehi. Finally, however, all objections were satisfactorily adjusted, and the City Council ordered that a tier of blocks be surveyed around the wall. These did not supply the unexpected demand for building lots, so a tier each on the north and south was subsequently surveyed and sold to home builders.

In the spring of 1861 there came to Lehi another plague, although this time it was far less menacing than the grasshoppers. The pest now took the form of blackbirds which did considerable damage to the farmers in the Big Field. The City Council established a fund and arranged shooting contests to put an end to these marauders. Their efforts were highly successful and the blackbirds soon ceased to bother.

FIRST TANNERY.

Early in 1862, David Evans and Canute Peterson built a small tannery near the north-east corner of Third North and Second West. Jonas Holdsworth, a tanner who had learned his trade in England, was the first workman in the little establishment. He had brought some of his tools with him across the Atlantic and had others made here. By aid of tan bark from the surrounding mountains, Holdsworth succeeded in making a quality of upper, sole, and harness leather that was exceedingly useful to the people of the city. The tannery closed in 1870.

SIXTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The Legislative Assembly of the Territory, in January, 1863, had reduced the offices of Territorial municipalities to a mayor, two aldermen, and two councilors. Accordingly, the ticket for the election held February 16, 1863, contained this lessened number of names. The following candidates were successful: Mayor, Lorenzo H. Hatch; Aldermen, Isaac Goodwin and William H. Winn; Councilors, Canute Peterson, Thomas Ashton, and Charles D. Evans.

Fourth Mayor of Lehi, 1863.

Dissimilar to the elective offices, the appointive offices were not lessened, but rather increased. Qualifying for office on February 18 in the council chamber, which at that time was the upper room of the Meeting House, the sixth City Council made the following appointments: Recorder, Joseph J. H. Colledge; Marshal, Abel Evans; Treasurer,

Canute Peterson; Water Master, Thomas Ashton; Supervisor, John Zimmerman; Pound Keeper, William Clark; Sexton, John W. Norton; Sealer of Weights and Measures, William S. S. Willes; Field Committee, John Zimmerman, John R. Murdock, Abram Hatch, Thomas Karren, Sen., and Thomas R. Davis. Later appointments were: Examiners, David

Evans, Abram Hatch, and Israel Evans; Captain of Police, William Southwick; Policemen, Isaac Chilton, James T. Powell, Swen Jacobs, John Jacobs, Robert Dunn, Samuel Briggs, William Evans, Jacob Bushman, William Gurney, and Suel Lamb.

Mayor Hatch's tenure of office lasted only a month, for on March 18 he moved to Cache County. He was succeeded by Alderman Isaac Goodwin whose vacancy in turn was filled through the promotion of Councilor Canute Peterson. Israel Evans was then selected as a Councilor. In place of William S. S. Willes, who had accepted a call for a mission to England, Joseph J. Smith became Sealer of Weights and Measures.

Not to be outdone by their predecessors, the sixth City Council also created a new appointive office. This took the name of Inspector of Wood and Lumber, John W. Norton being the first man who performed its functions and received its limited emoluments. His duties are set forth in the following ordinance:

An Ordinance Defining the Duties and Regulating the Fees of the Inspector of Wood and Lumber.

Section 1. Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Lehi that there shall be an Inspector of Wood and Lumber who shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take an oath and give bonds in the penal sum of one hundred dollars, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties thereof, which bond shall be approved by, and filed with, the City Recorder.

Section 2. Be it further ordained that it shall be the duty of the Inspector of Wood and Lumber to inspect and measure all wood and lumber, when called upon by any person within the City of Lehi.

Section 3. And be it further ordained that said Inspector shall receive 20 cents per hundred feet for measuring and inspecting wood.

Passed January 23, 1864. Published January 25, 1864.

Daniel S. Thomas, Canute Peterson, and Thomas Karren, the school trustees, were completing the THURMAN SCHOOL HOUSE.

Thurman School House at this time, and finding their funds scarce, they petitioned the City Council, March 25, to lend them the surplus wheat in the city treasury. After investigating the condition of the municipal treasury, the council loaned the trustees thirty bushels of wheat. With this assistance, the trustees were able to bring the school house to such a stage of completion that the City Council could hold its meetings there. The first session in the Thurman School House was held January 2, 1864. This now made four places available for such meetings, the log school house (the first home of the council), the Tithing Office, the upper room in the Meeting House, and the Thurman Building.

MAIL COACH MASSACRE.

In the spring of 1863, Lehi was witness to one of the most sombre events of her whole history. A number of soldiers from Fort Douglas, enjoying a vacation at Fort Crittenden, as Camp Floyd had later been named, wounded two Indians and frightened the squaws of a neighboring camp. It was all done in a spirit of deviltry and without provocation, so the Indians swore revenge on "the men who wore the blue coats," and unfortunately confused these with the drivers of the mail coaches.

On Tuesday evening, June 9, a number of the red skins told Mrs. William Ball, who then lived at the Jordan Bridge, and whose family was extremely friendly with the Indians, that on the next day they were going to kill the mail driver and "blue coats." Mrs. Ball warned the driver, who was then on his way to Fort Crittenden, but he could do nothing by way of preparation.

The next day, June 10, George Kirkham, then a boy of twelve, was herding cattle west of the Jordan, about one mile north-west of the Cold Springs. Seeing the mail coach come flying in the distance, his curiosity was aroused, and he followed its course closely. In a short time he could discern a number of horsemen following the vehicle and then he could see that they were Indians and were firing at it. Ever faster they came, the driver making a great effort to reach the road to the ford across the river, which was about three miles below the bridge. He had cut through the country in order to gain this haven, but finally the savages turned him south, drove him into high brush, and the speed of his horses was checked. First his leaders fell and when a wheeler went down, too, he dismounted and stood behind the other, firing at his assailants as rapidly as possible. Finally both he and his last horse were shot down, and the sole passenger in the coach was murdered with him. The driver's name was Wood Reynolds, and because of his bravery the Indians cut his heart out and ate it, believing that some of his courage would in that way pass to them. They then scalped both their victims and mutilated their bodies terribly.

In the meantime, Kirkham had run for the bridge, and after delivering his horrible tidings there, had gone on to Lehi and started a posse out for the scene of blood. But it was too late. The Indians had departed and nothing remained but to take the bodies of the men on to Salt Lake City.

The next morning William Ball, who was returning from Goshen, met this band of assassins, glorying in their scalps and proudly displaying the bugle and other property of the unfortunate men. Although a squad of soldiers was dispatched from Fort Douglas in search of the murderers, they were never apprehended.

SUGAR CANE.

In the early '60s arose an industry which for a time was a very important factor in the life of the people. This was the culture of sugar cane and the production of molasses from it. Nearly all the farmers had fields of cane, indeed most of the ground north-east of the city was used for that purpose. To produce the molasses, a number of mills were installed, the largest being on the present site of the Central School House; it was operated by water from Dry Creek. At that time, the chief articles of food for children were bread and molasses.

SEVENTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The seventh election, observed February 13, 1865, resulted in the holding over of all the city officers, namely: Mayor, Isaac Goodwin; Aldermen, William H. Winn and Canute Peterson; Councilors, Thomas Ashton, Charles D. Evans, and Israel Evans. On the following 9th of March, the appointive offices were filled: Marshal, Abel Evans; Treasurer, Canute Peterson; Water Master, Thomas Ashton; Supervisor, Paulinas H. Allred; Sexton and Inspector of Wood and Lumber, John W. Norton; Sealer of Weights and Measures, Joseph J. Smith; Field Committee, Israel Evans, Chairman, Orrace Murdock, Thomas R. Davis, Samuel Briggs, and Joseph J. Smith; Examiners, David Evans, Israel Evans, and William Fotheringham; Policemen, Jacob Bushman, Captain, Isaac Chilton, John Jacobs, William Gurney, James T. Powell, Paulinas H. Allred, Thomas Karren, Jr., George Davy, Samuel Taylor, and John Roberts.

A few changes also occurred in this set of officers. May 10, Suel Lamb received the appointment as Marshal to succeed Abel Evans, who had gone to Wales on a mission. On the same date John W. Norton assumed the duties of Councilor in place of Charles D. Evans, who had moved from the city. The following December the Marshalship was again vacated, this time because Suel Lamb took up his residence in Cache County. Jacob Bushman now became Marshal and Isaac Chilton succeeded him as Chief of Police. December 29, William Clark became a Councilor and William S. S. Willes, Sexton and Inspector of Wood and Timber, to fill the vacancies resulting from John W. Norton's removal from the city.

ISAAC GOODWIN,
Fifth Mayor of Lehi, 1863-1867; 1875-1877.

FREIGHTING.

About this time a number of citizens of Lehi found it to their advantage to engage in the freighting business to Montana. Carrying their farm produce to the mining camps of that state, they found they could sell at very profitable prices. For eggs they received $1.25 a dozen, and for oats and flour 12 cents and 24 cents a pound respectively. In 1865 Abram Hatch sent two teams to Montana with Amasa Lyman and Stephen Ross as teamsters. Jasper Rolf and Peter Lott made the trip during the same season.

EIGHTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The following officers were elected at the city election held February 11, 1867: Mayor, Israel Evans; Aldermen, William H. Winn and John Woodhouse; Councilors, William Clark, William S. Willes, and Oley Ellingson. Some of the appointments made were: Recorder, Joseph J. H. Colledge; Marshal, Joseph A. Thomas; and Treasurer, Oley Ellingson. On account of the loss of the records of this council, it is impossible to ascertain the remaining officers.

The most important event occurring during this administration was the official listing of the land of Lehi. The Federal Land Office allotted two days in which the owners of land might file their claims, but through the liberality of the Land Office officials, this time was extended to two months. This gave everyone sufficient time to insure their land titles. On behalf of the citizens of Lehi, Mayor Israel Evans entered and filed the land upon which the city was built, so that during the next administration it was possible to issue deeds for city lots.

BUILDING A HOUSE IN 1867.

One of the most interesting men who have lived in Lehi is John Woodhouse. During a long and busy life he has shown unusual skill and versatility and few men have done more to help the community than he.

JOHN WOODHOUSE.

Possessed of a remarkably retentive memory, he has acquired a fund of information on numerous and various subjects which he has often found occasion to use for the benefit of his fellows. Although he has served his city as lawyer, doctor, merchant, lecturer, judge, and entertainer, he still found time to follow the vocation of farmer and tailor for the support of his family. The following account of the erection of a house in early days is from his pen, and aptly illustrates the spirit of the times:

"I purchased a house and lot from Thomas Oakey for which I paid $300.00 as follows: I let him have some cattle, a wagon, a bed coverlet woven by Mother

Thomas, and the balance in wheat at the Tithing Office to apply on the Oakey family debt to the Perpetual Emigration Fund. During the winter of 1866-1867, most of the house fell down, as it had been built of mud without a stone foundation, so I was compelled to build a new one.

“For the benefit of our children, I shall relate how I built a house sixteen feet wide by thirty-four feet long and two stories high, practically without money or credit.

“After the spring work was done on the farm, I moved the family into a small granary, cleared the debris of the old house away and hauled rock for the foundation. Abraham Enough, the mason, was under contract to make adobes for Robert Gilchrist, but would rather lay rock if I could arrange with Gilchrist. When I approached Gilchrist on the matter, he was quite willing that Enough should work for me, and I could pay him (Gilchrist) by making a pair of pants each for himself and brother Niel: thus I got the foundations laid.

“I was considering the best way to get the adobes for the walls, when my neighbor, Andrew F. Peterson, proposed that if I would furnish the material and make him a suit of clothes, he would make my adobes. Making the clothes was a small matter, but to furnish the material was a serious consideration; however, I finally agreed to it. I sheared sheep and earned wool from which my wife spun and wove cloth for two suits of clothes. The one I paid Peterson for the adobes, the other I gave to John Andreason for building the walls.

"I procured window and door frames from John C. Nagle which had come out of the buildings at Camp Floyd. I hauled timber from the canyons and made sleepers for floors and plates and stringers for the roof. Several men who were owing me for work, done the year previous and were now working at John Zimmerman's saw mill in American Fork Canyon, paid me in lumber and shingles. I also exchanged work with Newal A. Brown by binding grain for him in the forenoon and receiving his help in putting on the roof in the afternoon when the grain was too dry to bind.

"The shingle nails used were second hand ones from Camp Floyd and cost 30 cents a pound, while new nails cost 75 cents a pound. The lumber for casings and upstairs floors I bought from Latimer & Taylor, of Salt Lake City, paying $15.00 down and promising to pay a fat pig to weigh about 200 pounds at killing time for the balance. I procured the lumber for the lower floors from Anthony Ivins, of Salt Lake City, agreeing to pay in geese, at the rate of one goose for fifty feet of lumber, the geese to be delivered in time for Christmas dinner. I delivered the geese on time, but I had to leave Lehi in a blinding snow storm to do it. The nails used in the construction of the building were made by James W. Taylor and cost two cents each in currency or one cent in gold. I did my own lathing and exchanged work with William Clark and John E. Ross for the plastering. Thus we were able to move into the house and occupy it, although it was not entirely finished. Best of all, it had no encumbrance upon it."

CHAPTER XIII.

The Black Hawk War.

ALMOST twenty years had elapsed since the pioneers first essayed their fortune on the banks of the great Inland Sea. The two decades had witnessed many changes, both in the life of the settlers themselves and in the conditions which confronted them. Carrying out their colonization policy, they had spread into all parts of the Territory, founding little colonies on a basis of permanency and self-support. The southern and central parts of Utah, especially, had been the scene of numerous attempts at establishing settlements, and in the main they were successful. Thus there grew up San Pete, Sevier, Piute, Iron, and Beaver counties. The colonists had almost universally been at peace with the Indians. Naturally, disagreements had arisen over various matters, but with patience and forbearance they had generally been adjusted without delay or trouble. Still, the never-ceasing advance of the whites had aroused the animosity of many of the Indians, so that by 1865 it was a delicate matter to restrain them.

On April 9, 1865, in Manti, during the course of a quarrel over some stolen cattle, John Lowry of that place unceremoniously pulled a certain Chief Jake from his horse, thereby seriously offending his dignity and inciting the ire of his tribesmen. It needed but this trifling cause to fan the subdued anger of the Indians into flames. The same night the red men raided the cattle and drove most of them off. Next day they attacked a rescuing party and killed one of its members. Thus began the Black Hawk War, so named from the wily chief who later assumed the leadership of the savages. The Territorial militia was immediately mustered into service, and during the next three summers, under command of Daniel H. Wells, it performed valuable service in protecting the lives and property of the southern settlers.

GEORGE WILLIAM KIRKHAM,

As part of this citizen soldiery, forty men from Lehi participated in the war. At different times during 1866 and 1867, they joined expeditions to the south and served in the campaigns in San Pete and Sevier counties. At home the utmost vigilance was observed; the town was constantly under guard; the cattle and horses were watched with unceasing care. As a result, Lehi's total loss in the Black Hawk War was a few horses.

PRELIMINARY EXPEDITIONS.

The first company to leave Lehi was under command of Washburn Chipman, of American Fork, and the date of its departure was March 3, 1866. Together with a number of men from neighboring towns, James Kirkham, William Simmonds, Elisha H. Davis, Jr., James Lamb, and Henry Mallet made up this party. The route lay through Cedar Valley, Tintic Valley and then south to Cherry Creek. During the whole march, the expedition never once caught sight of an Indian, although several times they were in the near proximity of skirmishes between the savages and other troops. The company disbanded in Lehi, March 22.

WILLIAM YATES.

A second relief party was organized in the following April to rescue some white men who had been taken captive by Chief Tabby, in Strawberry Valley, of whose condition the people of Lehi had learned through Joseph Murdock of Heber. Under the command of Colonel Paulinas H. Allred, Samuel Taylor, William Bone, Jr., John Bushman, Edward Cox, William Sparks, John Zimmerman, James Kirkham, Elisha H. Davis, Jr., Edwin Goodwin, Daniel W. Thomas, Henry Mallet, and Stephen Ross joined a like number of men from American Fork and four from Pleasant Grove, and proceeded to the mouth of Provo Canyon, where they expected to be joined by reinforcements from Provo. Shortly before reaching that place, however, a messenger from Heber met them and informed them that through a bribe of a number of cattle, the captives had been released. The company immediately returned home, but held themselves in readiness for service at a moment's notice.*

FIRST COMPANY TO SAN PETE.

Abraham G. Conover organized in Provo, on May 1, the first company from Utah County which went to the seat of war in San Pete. With this party were James Lamb, Mathias Peterson, Thomas Fowler, Robert Fox, and John Karren from Lehi. James Lamb held the rank of sergeant, while Thomas Fowler was captain of ten.

The service of the company consisted of guarding

*On the way to American Fork, a little incident happened to the Lehi contingent which threatened to delay their rescue expedition temporarily. Besides their horses, the men brought a number of pack animals. Among these was a wild mule, borrowed by Henry Mallet from John C. Nagle, and loaded now with frying pans, skillets and other cooking utensils. Disliking the noise made by its pack, the beast determined to rid himself of it, so unexpectedly began a wild dash for liberty. The whole party joined in pursuit. The chase was a merry one—the mule in the lead with the din of the dishes worse than ever, the men following at full speed close behind, and adding not a little to the disturbance with their excited cries. But Fate was against the descendant of Balaam's loquacious quadruped—all at once it plunged head foremost in a deep mudhole, whence with much difficulty the men extricated it.

the towns in San Pete and Sevier counties. They accompanied a number of scouting and foraging expeditions, and at one time went as far south as Circle Valley. They were mustered out of service July 18.

SECOND COMPANY.

Came another call for men on June 12. In response, William H. Winn was appointed captain of a company, John Zimmerman as his second lieutenant, Jasper Rolf as sergeant, and the following as privates: Loren Olmstead, John Bushman, Henry Mallet, Edwin Goodwin, Samuel Taylor, Alfred Turner, and William Bone, Jr. Their work was similar to that of the first company—guarding the property of the towns in San Pete and Sevier. Especially was this company active around Fountain Green and Mount Pleasant, although they made numerous expeditions into the neighboring mountains. Accompanying General Daniel H. Wells home, they disbanded August 13.

THIRD COMPANY.

The third expedition in which Lehi men served was organized in Payson on July 3, with Jonathan S. Page of that city as captain. Frank Molen acted as sergeant, while George McConnell, Daniel W. Thomas, Newal A. Brown, Joseph Ashton, William Mathews, John E. Ross, and Thomas Karren, Jr., served as privates. Scouting in the mountains of San Pete, Sevier and Piute counties made up the work of this company. They were released from service August 25.

FOURTH COMPANY.

The last company of this year was formed in American Fork, August 7, Alva Green of that place acting as captain. Stephen Ross, John W. Wing, John Roberts, Jr., Jacob Cox, and David Pearce made up the Lehi contingent. With Fountain Green as its headquarters, this company scouted throughout the whole of San Pete Valley, with occasional trips into Sevier County. Its members were discharged October 7.

FIFTH COMPANY.

The opening of spring, in 1867, saw hostilities between the Indians and whites break out with greater ferocity than ever. Chief Black Hawk proved an extremely sagacious and wily foe, hard to apprehend, and always striking at unexpected places. It was during this summer that the hardest campaign was waged against him and that he was practically subdued.

FRANK MOLEN AND WIFE.

Under Orson P. Miles, of Salt Lake City, a number of Lehi men enlisted April 22. They were Daniel W. Thomas, who acted now as second lieutenant, Stephen Ross, John Bushman, William Bone, Jr., Geo. McConnell, and Byron W. Brown. It will be observed that all of these men except the last had been in service the previous year. Since the settlers had decided to abandon, temporarily at least, their homes, this company assisted in the evacuation of Richfield, Glenwood, Alma, and Salina.* Just before July 24, some of the militiamen from Lehi were allowed to return home on furlough, while John Worlton, Thomas F. Trane, Wicliffe Smith, and Hyland D. Wilcox were sent forward to replace them. This relief party left Lehi July 20, joined their company at Ephraim and continued in service until the whole company was discharged, August 6. The men on furlough were on the point of returning when they received notice of the cessation of hostilities.

On August 19, Black Hawk made a treaty of peace with the white men in Strawberry Valley. This event marked the close of the war, although a few depredations were committed in the south the next year by Indians who did not know that an agreement had been reached.

During the course of the war the men who had remained at home were equally as active as those of their townsmen who went to the front. Paulinas H.

*Not all the life of the volunteers was serious. On one occasion, Stephen Ross, a great joker, succeeded, with the help of several others, in chaining Moroni Pratt. Pratt had long hair which became very much snarled and disheveled when he was tied to a wagon and compelled to lie all day in the bright sun. Ross told newcomers that they had succeeded in subduing a crazy man, and indeed the appearance of the prisoner, who was straining at his chains, muttering all sorts of imprecations and foaming at the mouth, amply bore him out. Finally, when a large number had collected, Pratt succeeded in breaking loose and started for the crowd. With all speed, these turned and fled to the hills, only returning when assured that the "crazy man" had been captured.

edge of the manual of arms. Various others—notably Andrew A. Peterson, Samuel Briggs, and James Harwood—furnished horses, saddles, mules, wagons, guns, and ammunition.

Due to the abandonment of the towns in southern Utah, Lehi received a small increase in her population. Andrew R. Anderson, Peter J. Christofferson, and George Beck had lived in the districts where most of the fighting had taken place and now moved to Lehi.

WAR REMINISCENCES.

One of the best ways of obtaining an accurate conception of a historical event is to listen to the story of that event as told by the participants themselves. Fortunately, it is possible to present here the accounts of various incidents pertaining to the war as related by men from Lehi who served in it.

Says John W. Wing:

“I well remember the drilling we received in military maneuvers, one being to shoot at an enemy while going at full speed. The whole company would be drawn up in line, and at a given signal would charge towards a target. When within one hundred yards, we would receive the order to wheel and fire. We were then supposed to discharge our arms at the target and return to the point of beginning without slacking speed. About the first time we tried this exercise, we almost killed each other, for instead of all firing simultaneously, only a very few succeeded in firing together. This so frightened the horses that they became almost unmanageable, while the firing continued until we reached the starting point. One man shot his horse through the head between the ears, killing him instantly."

William Bone, Jr., relates the following:

"A rather remarkable incident occurred June 2, 1867. Our company was camped near the Sevier River bridge, on its return from helping the people of Scipio abandon that town. Some time before sundown, as William Tunbridge and myself were enjoying a stroll along the river, we stopped a few minutes on the edge of the bank, which at this place was fully ten feet high. Presently we moved back a distance, when several rods of the bank about ten feet wide, fell with a crash to the river bed below. Instantly Tunbridge remarked, 'An Indian outbreak.' The water in the river was some distance away, so the bed was dry at this place, which makes it more remarkable that the bank should fall the moment we stepped off it.

"When we returned to camp, Tunbridge told the captain of the incident, and insisted that an Indian outbreak was imminent. The captain, to be on the side of safety, ordered an extra guard placed that night. The next day we received the sad news that Major John Wesley Vance, of Alpine, and Heber Houtz, of Salt Lake City, had been killed on Twelve-Mile Creek the evening before, and by comparing notes, we found that these men were shot at about the same time the bank fell.

“The most desperate struggle I ever had to keep awake happened while we were stationed at Fort Gunnison. A rumor reached us that Indians had been seen in Salina Canyon about twenty miles away, and it was decided by our captain to place a picket guard at a convenient place to observe the movements of the red men. Daniel W. Thomas, two men from American Fork and myself were selected for the task. After receiving our instructions, we started for the canyon in the night, as we hoped to be in position before the first gray light of dawn was visible in the east. When near our destination, we left the road and skirted the side hills of the canyon to a sheltered cave, where we

“In the darkness Thomas and I crawled to the top of the ridge, and each selected a high point commanding a view of the canyon and the surrounding country. As this was the second night we had gone without sleep, the effort to keep awake was almost more than human nature could endure. Thomas resorted to pounding his head with a stone, while I pricked myself with a pin. Finally the sun came up, flooding the mountains and valleys with light and beauty, and as the warm rays poured down upon us, our eyes grew heavy and our limbs became numb. But we dared not give way, for perhaps life and death depended on our vigilance. At noon we exchanged places with our companions, and eventually passed through the long summer day.

CHARLES PHILLIPS,
A Pioneer of 1866.

“When it was fully dark, we left the canyon and returned to camp, not having seen any Indians. We explained to the captain the great danger of having a picket guard so far away from the main body. The practice was afterwards discontinued."

Samuel Taylor says:

"I have never suffered so much with the cold as I did on the night of June 20, 1866, although it was in the middle of summer. Our company was going over the mountains to Circle Valley, when, near the top of the divide, we received word that Indians had been seen in the neighborhood. We camped that night on the ridge and one-half the company was placed on guard. Another young man and myself were stationed on a high cliff where the wind blew directly upon us, and before morning I thought I should perish. I believe this was the coldest night I ever experienced.

"Being in suspense and always looking for Indians, it is no wonder that some men with a superabundance of imagination saw them where they did not exist. A striking case of this kind happened as we were on the way to Fish Lake. When we reached the high ridge between Grass Valley and Fish Lake, some of the men saw Indians in the timber near the lake. We were all ordered to dismount and form into skirmish lines, except a few men who were placed in charge of the horses. In this manner we proceeded towards the lake, covering the entire distance by a series of running, hiding, crouching, crawling, and charging movements. Fortunately, we found that the Indians were all imaginary."

The following from Robert Fox:

"One time, while camped at Gunnison, we received word to proceed to Salina at double quick time. When we arrived, we found the town already deserted by its inhabitants. Chickens cackled and pigs squealed, but no human being was in sight. We afterwards learned that the day previous to our visit, Black Hawk, with a band of warriors, had swooped down on the little town and stolen every horse and cow in the place. Then the dusky chieftain, who spoke English fluently, had ridden around the settlement and tauntingly shouted for the men to come out and get their cows or their papooses would go hungry. During the night the inhabitants fled to Manti, leaving the town as we found it.

“One time Captain Conover took about a dozen of us young men with him on a scouting trip. We had not gone far when we noticed what we supposed to be a steer near the mouth of a canyon. Immediately three or four of the most thoughtless ones among us started after the object, but the captain called them back and told us that this was not a steer, as we supposed. Upon firing a shot at the dark object in the distance, we were surprised to see a cowhide thrown in the air and the object resolve itself into two Indians, who quickly disappeared up the canyon.”

Joseph Ashton tells this:

“While our company was stationed at Twelve-Mile Creek, in July, 1866, John E. Ross and I spent a very pleasant afternoon fishing in the stream. About sundown the mosquitoes became so annoying that we concluded to return to camp, which was in plain sight, some distance away. As we went along swinging our hats to brush away the troublesome insects, the picket guard mistook our movements for danger signals, and hurried to camp to give the alarm. We noticed a great deal of activity in camp, so we quickened our speed, wondering what was the matter. When our companions saw us running, they became greatly alarmed, and hurriedly grasping their weapons, they mounted their horses and hastened out to meet us. As they drew near, they inquired in very excited tones what the trouble was. We told them we had no trouble except the mosquitoes, and would like very much to know what had happened in camp. To our surprise they informed us that we had caused all the excitement. Later, when matters were explained in camp, our supposedly great danger caused no little amusement."

Such was Lehi's part in the Black Hawk War, the last conflict of importance with the Indians. For their service these volunteers received nothing. Immediately after the last campaign a report was submitted which showed that the struggling young Territory had expended $1,121,037.38 to protect the lives and property of its inhabitants, that seventy of its citizens had met their death, and that twenty-five towns had been abandoned. Repeated attempts have been made both to obtain remuneration and have the veterans of the conflict placed on the Federal pension list. So far, all efforts have been without avail. Happily, the State of Utah has not acted in the same manner. During the legislative session of 1913, $25,000.00 was appropriated as pay for the volunteers in the Indian wars. Thus does virtue and bravery, after many days, receive its reward.

CHAPTER XIV.

Beginnings of Business Life.

IN THE establishment of settlements in Utah, commerce played but a small part. The pioneers attached themselves to the soil and wrested their livelihood from it, thus assuring a future permanent and unquestionable. The immeasurable stores of mineral wealth buried in the adjoining mountains they left untouched; it remained for other hands to profit by Nature's bounteousness there. Neither did they attempt to follow the example of their predecessors in the Great Basin and engage in trapping and fur trading. Their sole aim—and in this they followed the advice of their leaders—was to obtain possession of the land—time would take care of the rest. Hence, there was no occasion for commerce, except in the rudest forms of barter and trade.

But, similar to all other colonies on the frontiers of civilization, later growth wrought changes to those in Utah in this as in other respects. At first the settlers were hard put to it to obtain the bare necessities of life; but with the passing years came greater prosperity, and hence, also, a surplus of products. From this arose the possibility and the desire to trade, and at this point enters commerce.

In Lehi the advent of this stage is easily recognized, because it came, not gradually, but all at once, through the establishment of Camp Floyd. The trade which grew up between the city and the barracks has been noted before. Here was the possibility of commerce—it needed but a short time for men to recognize it as such, and utilize it. In Lehi one of these men was Thomas Taylor, and with his work as intermediary between the farmers of the town and the soldiers of the camp began Lehi's commercial history.

THE FIRM OF T. AND W. TAYLOR.

Shortly after the abolishment of Camp Floyd, Thomas and William W. Taylor determined to go into the mercantile business for themselves. To their minds, the growing population of Lehi was sufficient justification for the venture. Obtaining a stock of goods, they began a mercantile business in a building erected on the corner of Main and Second West Streets. This was the first real store in Lehi, and the site of this initial venture has been in use by various companies ever since.* The merchandise of the store was obtained from Salt Lake City, and because of the great cost of transporting most of it across the plains, the prices were necessarily high.

LEHI UNION EXCHANGE.

The next commercial enterprise was the Lehi Union Exchange, founded in 1868, as a result of agitation on the part of Israel Evans, who, while on a mission to England, had studied the Rochdale co-operative system, and now believed the same plan of cooperation could be utilized beneficially in his own city. In a meeting called by Bishop Evans, and attended by Israel Evans, William Wanlass, John Zimmerman, William Clark, Thomas R. Jones, Andrew A. Peterson, Joseph A. Thomas, and James Q. Powell, the project was launched and definite plans made for its maintenance. David Evans was elected president of the company; William Wanlass, secretary; John Zimmerman, treasurer; Israel Evans, William Clark, and Thomas R. Jones, directors; and it was capitalized for $350.00, in shares of $25.00 each. Several of the incorporators volunteered to haul the first goods free of charge. Thus was organized the first co-operative store in Utah.

On July 23 the new company opened its establishment for business. Its first quarters consisted of a little building on Third West and First South Streets, now used as a granary by Andrew R. Anderson. The enterprise met with immediate success, so much so that at the end of the first six months of business a dividend of $28.20 a share—over 100 per cent—was declared, although it had been originally intended that any profits should be used towards the establishment of other industries, notably a grist mill and woolen mill. This unlooked-for prosperity necessitated the obtaining of more commodious quarters, which was done through the purchase of the present site of the City Hall from Hyrum Norton. The company immediately excavated a cellar and commenced the construction of a building. Twice did the winds blow the frame work over, but before a third attempt was necessary, other changes had occurred which greatly altered the status of commercial affairs.

With the great success of the Union Exchange and the widespread urging of the co-operative plan, the business of T. and W. Taylor had suffered to a considerable extent. This occasioned much discussion and not a little bitterness on both sides. As a compromise, it was decided to consolidate the two companies through the purchase of the Taylor business by the Exchange. Thomas R. Cutler—a young man who later played one of the most important roles in Lehi's history—for T. and W. Taylor, and William Wanlass for the Union Exchange, completed these negotiations, and the latter company moved at once into the building formerly occupied by the Taylor concern.

Some time after this consolidation, the founding of the Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution in Salt Lake City began a widespread adoption throughout the Territory of the co-operative plan. The Lehi Union Exchange was linked to the Salt Lake company as a local branch, and henceforth was known as the "Co-op," although it had really preceded the central organization. The sign of the all-seeing eye and the inscription, "Holiness to the Lord" adorned the gabled front of the store and became familiar to the trades people of the city. William Wanlass was manager, chief clerk, and bookkeeper of the Exchange in its new home, and continued as such for many years. The prosperity which attended the first few years of business of the Exchange did not last. This was due to two reasons, the excessive credit system and the establishment, in 1871, of The People's Co-operative Institution. So poor, indeed, was the business of the Exchange that in 1880 it sold out to its younger rival, and was henceforth known as the "Branch."

PIONEER MILLINERS.

Early in Lehi's history, Mrs. Samuel James had made the first ladies' straw hats; but in 1866, Mrs. Harriet Austin Jacobs set up a millinery store which has continued in operation ever since. Mrs. Jacobs manufactured her own hats, having learned the trade while a girl in England. This pioneer head-gear was made from straw grown in Lehi, and selected, cut, split, and braided by hand. Assisting the milliner in this work were Mrs. Emma Austin, Mrs. Harriet Webb, Mrs. Sarah Gurney, Mrs. Ann Whitman, Mrs. Ann James, and Mrs. Elizabeth Cutler. Mrs. Mary A. Webb manufactured straw trimmings. In July, 1868, while on a visit to Lehi, Brigham Young was so delighted with the hats worn by the women of the city that he ordered twelve from Mrs. Jacobs for his daughters, paying $4.00 each for them.

THE TELEGRAPH REACHES LEHI.

The autumn of 1870 saw Lehi in communication with the outside world through one of the modern inventions—the telegraph. A. Milton Musser, of Salt Lake City, acting for the Deseret Telegraph Line, installed at that time an office of his company in the residence of Bishop Evans, and placed Miss Ina Johnson of Springville in charge. The company offered to teach telegraphy to any of the local young women, and promised to place the office in their charge when they had reached a stage of sufficient proficiency.

Three young ladies from Lehi, Barbara A. Evans (Mrs. John Bush), Isabella Karren (Mrs. Samuel R. Thurman), and Harriet A. Zimmerman (Mrs. Henry M. Royle), undertook to solve the mysteries of dots and dashes under the tutorage of Miss Johnson, at the rate of $5.00 a month. Since the office was in her home, Miss Evans rapidly outstripped her rivals and obtained the position. The telegraph continued in operation until May, 1872, when, on account of insufficient receipts, it was abandoned. Miss Evans then accepted a similar position in Farmington.

UTAH SOUTHERN RAILROAD.

The completion of the track of the Utah Southern Railroad into Lehi marked an important epoch in the growth of the city. The arrival of the first train on September 23, 1872, meant much to the citizens, both as to their future development and their immediate satisfaction. Many of them, and especially the children, had never seen a train before, so the first shriek of the iron monster was anticipated for weeks and realized with intense delight.

The effect of the advent of the railroad in Lehi was almost magical. State Street witnessed a mushroom growth of saloons, boarding houses, and small shops; commodities became cheaper at once; and great numbers of people moved into the city. For a year the terminus of the road was in Lehi, and this made the city the distributing center for goods shipped to the towns of the south. Many of the men obtained profitable employment in freighting, and in addition much money was spent in the city by freighters from other districts. Furthermore, a narrow gauge line was constructed to American Fork Canyon to tap the smelting being done there in the Miller and other mines. This proved profitable to Lehi, both as a market for goods and in furnishing work in hauling supplies and ore. In the station, the railroad operated a telegraph system and placed it in charge of Miss Barbara Evans who had returned from Farmington. The old Utah Southern has been succeeded by the Union Pacific, and at present by the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railway.

THE PEOPLE'S CO-OPERATIVE INSTITUTION.

Of the various business concerns which sprang up around the Utah Southern station only one took permanent form—The People's Co-operative Institution. In anticipation of the arrival of the railway, and its resulting value to adjacent real estate and business, Thomas R. Cutler had, in 1871, a year previous to the coming of the railroad, commenced a mercantile business in a little adobe building, fourteen by twenty feet, built by William W. Taylor on the south-east corner of Second East and State Streets. Cutler conducted the business alone during the first year, but the advent of the Utah Southern made additional help necessary. Accordingly he employed William Hutchings, who assumed charge of a meat market, and Edwin Standring.

James W. Taylor, on April 4, 1872, secured the first license for the store from the City Council. The same year, on December 21, the company incorporated under the name of People's Co-operative Institution, with a capital stock of $28,000.00, divided into 700 shares of a part value of $40.00. James W. Taylor was elected president, Isaac Goodwin, vice-president; Thomas R. Cutler, secretary-treasurer, and Samuel Briggs, William Bone, Sr., and Jesse Smith, directors. In addition to the ordinary mercantile business, the "People's Co-op," as it has since been called, engaged, conjointly with Ira D. Wines, in the forwarding business, as long as Lehi remained the terminal point of the Utah Southern. The company also purchased the agency of Bain wagons and farm machinery from Howard Sebec, and operated a lumber yard. For a time it also acted as the shipping agent for the Copperopolis smelter in Mammoth, sending the ore from that plant to Boston. Nor was its activity confined to these things. Essaying the part of manufacturer, the "Co-op" produced the first commercial made shoes in the Territory, and the first furniture. The shoe shop, under the direction of Edward Southwick, made an excellent grade of boots, shoes and women's shoes, most of which were sold to the Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution in Salt Lake. Peter Loutensock had charge of the furniture department. Later methods, which could produce goods more cheaply, eventually drove the "Co-op" out of the manufacturing business.

WILLIAM BONE, SEN.

Thomas R. Cutler continued as manager of the company until April 29, 1893, when he resigned to assume control of the affairs of the Utah Sugar Company. William E. Racker, who had acted as assistant manager for some time, was selected as his successor. Under Racker's direction prosperity continued to attend the enterprise, so much so that in 1899 the capital stock was increased to $100,000.00, of which $60,000.00 was paid up. February 3, 1903, Manager Racker accepted a call for a mission to Denmark, and his duties fell upon Samuel I. Goodwin, who has since successfully directed the affairs of the company. From time to time the corporation has added to its stock and premises, until today the People's Co-operative Institution is as modern, efficient, and successful a mercantile plant as can be found in the whole State.

THE LIVERY BUSINESS.

The livery business in Lehi had a peculiar beginning. In April, 1877, James Harwood, who at that time was a postmaster and carried the mails, desired a vacation, and so hired Hans Hammer to act in his absence. Having bought Harwood's buggy and borrowed his horse, Hammer, upon the advice of a physician, continued carrying the mail after the postmaster's return. One day as he was leaving the station, a stranger inquired the way to lodgings and Hammer obligingly took him there. With this as a beginning, he soon learned to provide strangers with transportation about town. After he had used Harwood's horse a year, Hammer finally bought one himself, which immediately proceeded to demolish his only buggy in a runaway. The first livery stable was a straw shed on Main Street, where Darling's Hotel stands. After six years' use, a hail storm demolished this structure, and a new stable was built on the north side of the street, where the business is still conducted. A landmark in the Hammer concern was a horse, Old Roney by name, which, purchased in 1881, was in use until 1912, when he died. Upon the death of Hans Hammer, in 1905, his sons assumed control of the enterprise. Samuel's death in 1907 left George and Joseph in charge. At the present, Hammer Brothers' Livery is fully equipped with all kinds of necessary vehicles and with thirty horses.

DENVER AND RIO GRANDE RAILWAY.

The summer of 1881 witnessed Lehi placed on the second trans-continental railway—the Denver & Rio Grande. This road chose to come into the southern and western parts of the city. Its advent furnished considerable employment to Lehi workmen, because most of the grading was contracted to Lehi men, among them David Evans, Jr., and Samuel R. Thurman. Until 1889 the road was a narrow gauge, but after that year it was enlarged and equipped with standard rolling stock.

T. F. TRANE MERCANTILE COMPANY.

As the People's Co-operative Institution had been successful in the proximity of the Utah Southern station, so, upon the arrival of the Denver and Rio Grande Railway, an attempt was made to establish a mercantile business near that station. Thomas F. Trane and Augustus Powell were the promoters of this venture, and they finished their building and opened their store in June, 1883. Many changes were made in the ownership of this store. Powell soon sold his interest to Samuel P. Teasdale of Salt Lake, and soon afterwards Trane disposed of part of his holdings to Prime Evans. The firm of Trane and Evans continued but a short time when Teasdale bought the latter out, and Trane conducted the store as agent for the Salt Lake man. In 1894, through the failure in business of Teasdale, the store was discontinued.

THE FIRST BUTCHER.

As early as 1855, Joseph Dorton began the slaughtering of animals for food for the settlers. He had been called to come to Lehi by Brigham Young, and had moved his family here after selling the corner of Main Street and Third South, Salt Lake City (where now stands Walker's store), for a yoke of oxen. When the Lehi Union Exchange was established, he conducted the meat department of that institution. At a later date he began business on his own account, on the north side of Main Street, where, since his death, his sons have conducted a shop.

CATTLE AND SHEEP.

When the settlers of Lehi first began their terrible struggle to build homes on Dry Creek, they found the surrounding country covered to some extent with bunch grass and meadow grass, far more than in later times. This they soon learned formed excellent feed for their cattle, and they were not slow in using it. Often, indeed, they cut much of it with the scythe for hay. One crop was easily obtained, and in addition sufficient grazing to satisfy their animals until Christmas, if the weather permitted. Each family possessed only a few cattle, and these were generally herded with all the others of the settlement, this work being the special task of the boys. The lands south and west of the city were the best grazing grounds.

As the population of the town was augmented by new arrivals and economic life developed, certain individuals began to secure ownership of more than the original quota of cattle, and as a branch of farm life engaged in raising them for profit. To make this possible, the grazing lands on the west were extended into the foothills. Finally, when it had been indisputably demonstrated that the business could be conducted with profit, a number of men launched into cattle raising as their sole occupation. Taking advantage of West Canyon, they allowed their animals to feed in the mountains, and their herds might often be found far away from Lehi. Cattle raising, either as a branch of farming or as a vocation, has continued to occupy the attention of many of the citizens of Lehi until the present.

Many years after the cattle had found nourishing food on the foothills, sheep were introduced and allowed to graze in their place.* At first they found excellent pasturage in the vicinity of Lehi, but later, when wool raising had become more extensive, the herds were compelled to seek new regions. While fewer of Lehi's citizens have been wool growers than cattle men, yet those who have engaged in this industry have generally found it profitable, and a few have reaped fortunes from it.

*The first sheep in Lehi came from a herd which was being taken from the Missouri to California. On account of the unexpected cold, the herders decided to remain in Lehi during the winter; but scarcity of feed compelled them to sell many of their flock to Lehi farmers.

A later development of the cattle business was dairying. While the production of butter was an established part of farm work, yet in addition there have been attempts to maintain dairies. The first was built by Israel Evans, near the Jordan River. For a number of years it was operated, but finally it closed down. A later creamery was erected by a company of Lehi stockholders on the county road, a short distance east of the city. It was maintained with profit until it burned down. Farmers now sell their milk either in neighboring cities in Utah County or in Salt Lake City.

THE FIRST HOTELS.

It was many years after the founding of Lehi that the first hotel was erected, or even a building wholly devoted to that purpose. At first, David Evans furnished lodgings to visitors. In 1857, Abram Hatch threw open part of his house in which to entertain strangers. But it was not until after the arrival of the D. & R. G. railroad, in 1881, that a real hotel was operated. At that time Mrs. Sarah Smith built an adobe building on Main Street and Fourth West, where formerly had been a store belonging to John Woodhouse, and conducted it as a restaurant, Lehi being one of the eating places for passengers on the railroad. This building is still used as a hotel.

PIONEER DOCTORS AND DRUGGISTS.

In the days of Lehi's founding, when sickness or injury befel any of the pioneers, they would immediately send for Mrs. Lucy Cox, who, by means of an immense fund of useful, practical knowledge, to say nothing of home brewed remedies from herbs, could immediately render them valuable assistance. For many years she continued to help her neighbors, especially the members of her own sex.

Following her, at a much later date, was "Cap" Hart, a former sailor, who had some knowledge of homeopathic medicine and who was able to aid sufferers especially from measles and fever. He made no pretense at surgical knowledge or skill.

Many of the fractured limbs were set in early times by John Woodhouse who, along with numerous other accomplishments, was also something of a practical surgeon.

The first real doctor to practice in Lehi was Thomas S. Wadsworth. Dr. Wadsworth was a native of Iowa, and had resided in Ogden and American Fork before moving to Lehi, in 1881. With his medical skill he was able to alleviate much suffering that had hitherto been necessary.

The first drug store was opened in Lehi, in 1881, by Robert E. Collett. Some years later David Ellingson and Dr. C. L. Seabright also started in the pharmacy business. Dr. Seabright afterwards practiced medicine. Still other druggists were T. J. Wadsworth, who began business in 1897, and H. B. Merrihew, who followed him one year later.

THE WARM SPRINGS.

The warm springs west of Utah Lake had attracted the attention of the pioneers of Lehi, but it was a number of years after the founding of the city that John C. Nagle moved from the Cold Springs south to the warm ones. Later he took up title to the land. Seeing what he considered great potential possibilities in the springs, John Beck purchased the ranch from Nagle, and after unsuccessful attempts to utilize it as a chicken and a fruit farm, he opened it as a public resort, named it Saratoga, and built a swimming pool for the hot water, later following this with a much larger one. As such it was used until purchased by the Utah Sugar Company. Many improvements were made, and every measure taken to make it one of the best resorts in the West. The effort was not wholly successful; Saratoga became widely and favorably known; but lack of railroad facilities made the place unprofitable. It was therefore operated only on a small scale. Various efforts have been made to obtain railroad connections, and when finally they culminate in success, Saratoga will come into her own; for her location near the lake, her medicinal waters, her beautiful surroundings make her by natural endowment the equal of any resort in the inter-mountain country.

PIONEER JEWELERS.

In 1871, Gudmund Gudmundson established the first jewelry shop in Lehi. There had been but scant need for such a place heretofore. Using the back room of Hans Hammer's residence for two years, Gudmundson moved into the building now adjoining the fire department. His son, Abraham, later built a shop on his own lot on the south side of Main Street.

Joseph Broadbent and Ernest Webb have maintained shops at a later date.

CHAPTER XV.

TO chronicle now is the period between 1868 and 1890. These two decades are remarkable only for their steady, consistent growth. Again are seen the most gratifying results, accruing, not from any single event or combination of circumstances whose character was unusual or exciting, but rather from the every day life of the people. It is work that makes growth, and the development of Lehi during this period can be ascribed to the energy, frugality, and industry of its citizens. For example, if the municipal elections passed off biennially without untoward incident or over-abundant comment, then that does not speak of any lack of interest in them, but rather bears testimony of the stability of the political institutions of the time.

THE SWETT TRAGEDY.

During the close of the year 1868, Lehi was witness to one of the most diabolical crimes ever committed within her boundaries. On account of the White Pine mining boom, west of the city, considerable freighting was carried on with Lehi as the starting point. Among the miners who passed through were Harlem P. Swett and a man named Mayfield, together with a teamster whom they had hired in Salt Lake, Chauncy W. Millard. It later developed that Millard was a street Arab of New York, who, after a short service as a Union soldier, had drifted west in search of adventure. Passing south along the west side of the lake, the three men camped December 11 at the Stone House. Here Millard attempted to put into execution a fiendish scheme, which he had no doubt planned since joining his companions. Securing possession of Mayfield's revolver, the depraved youth — he was only 18 — cowardly shot Swett in the back as he sat unsuspectingly before the fire, killing him instantly. Turning his attention next to Mayfield, who was in the wagon just then searching for his revolver, Millard fired point blank at him, but in some way barely missed his aim. Mayfield jumped from the wagon and fled for the lake, followed by Millard who emptied his revolver as he ran. One shot took effect in Mayfield's hand. Crossing the lake on the ice, the wounded man gained the present site of Murdock's resort, and from there managed to reach Lehi.

CARL J. E. FJELD,
A Hand Cart Veteran.

At that time John Woodhouse was Justice of the Peace and he immediately sent for the body of Swett and dispatched the Constable, Joseph A. Thomas, and a posse after the murderer. A coroner's jury was then impanelled, consisting of Paulinas H. Allred, William Dawson, and Thomas F. Trane. They were unable to determine how Swett met his death, thinking perhaps he and Mayfield had quarrelled. In the meantime, the posse had discovered the riding horse which Millard had taken, but were unable to find any other trace of the man himself. Orrin Porter Rockwell, who was living in Lehi at this time, then took up the search. Rockwell was one of the most famous frontiersmen of his time and soon located Millard at a sheep ranch in Rush Valley. Upon being brought back to Lehi, the murderer freely confessed his crime and did not seem to feel at all sorry about it. Later he was taken to Provo and executed, while his victim, Swett, was buried in the Lehi cemetery. This crime, one of the worst ever committed in Lehi, aroused no little excitement.*

THE GRASSHOPPERS RETURN.

The early autumn of this year had witnessed the return of the pest that had formerly almost proved Lehi's undoing—the grasshoppers. Arriving in great hordes in August, they were unable to do much damage because the crops had practically matured. Every effort was made to combat them, but their eggs the next spring hatched before the crops were well under way and did considerable damage, although nothing on the scale of the former visitation.

NINTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

February 8, 1869, was the date of the ninth city election, and the Tithing Office the place where it was held. William H. Winn was chosen as Mayor; Israel Evans and John Zimmerman as Aldermen; and William Clark, William Yates, and Oley Ellingson as Councilors. Appointments were Joseph J. H. Colledge, Recorder; Charles Barnes, Treasurer; Alonzo D. Rhodes, Marshal; and Joseph J. H. Colledge, Assessor and Collector. Because of the loss of the records of this council, it is impossible to give the other appointments.

WILLIAM H. WINN,
Seventh Mayor of Lehi,
1869-1875; 1877-1878.

THE MEETING HOUSE FIRE.

On February 6, 1870, while Charles D. Evans was making an address at a regular Sunday morning service in the Meeting House, Isaac Fox and a number of other boys who were playing in John Zimmerman's lot, discovered that smoke was issuing from the roof of the church. They immediately warned several larger boys who were congregated just outside the building, and those in turn communicated the alarm to those inside, Charles Karren stepping to the door and shouting for the people to come out. This they immediately proceeded to do. The fire, which by this time had spread along the whole length of the building, had started from a stove in the attic which had been left with a hot fire after the adjournment of a prayer meeting that morning.

As quickly as possible, ladders were brought and a bucket brigade formed, the water being supplied from the wells of John C. Nagle, on the east, and Israel Evans, on the north. To assist further, John Stewart scaled the walls and took a position on the roof where he was able to do good work with the help of the bucket brigade. Soon the flames were under control, but not without a great deal of damage having been done. Especially was this true of the interior, where, because of excitement and thoughtlessness, the floor was ripped up, the chandeliers cut down, the lamps thrown out of the windows, the cornice pulled off and an attempt made to cut down the pillars which supported the upper floor and roof. Altogether the destruction wrought by the excited people was as great as the damage from the fire. A long time and considerable money was necessary fully to repair the loss.

TENTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The tenth civic election resulted in the re-choosing of the present incumbents — William H. Winn, Mayor; Israel Evans and John Zimmerman, Aldermen; William Clark, William Yates, and Oley Ellingson. Councilors. They resumed their duties on March 4, 1871, and selected Joseph J. H. Colledge as Recorder and Alonzo D. Rhodes as Marshal. Four days later the following appointments were made: Attorney and Sexton, George William Thurman; Supervisor, Israel Evans; Water Master, William L. Hutchings; Pound Keeper, William Clark; Treasurer, Charles Barnes; Inspector of Wood and Lumber, Thomas Ashton; Sealer of Weights and Measures, Joseph J. Smith; Assessor and Collector, Joseph J. H. Colledge; Policemen, Samuel Taylor, Captain, Jacob Hodge, Robert Gilchrist, Thomas Fowler, William Mathews, Andrew R. Anderson, Martin B. Bushman, Charles Phillips, and Thomas R. Jones; Examiners, David Evans, Israel Evans, and John Woodhouse; Fence Viewers, Daniel S. Thomas, William Ball, Samuel Briggs, Shadrack Empey, Paulinas H. Allred, and Martin B. Bushman; Pasture Committee, John Woodhouse, Alonzo D. Rhodes, and John Bushman.

THOMAS FOWLER.

Changes in this set of officers were many. August 28, John Zimmerman resigned as Alderman in favor of John Woodhouse, whom he considered better qualified than himself to act as Justice of the Peace, a position held by Aldermen in addition to being members of the council. John E. Ross and James W. Taylor were later chosen Sexton and Attorney, respectively, to fill the positions vacated by George W. Thurman, deceased. William Gurney and Jacob Cox succeeded John Woodhouse and Alonzo D. Rhodes on the Pasture Committee. On account of having moved some distance out of town, Alonzo D. Rhodes resigned as Marshal, May 6, and was succeeded by Andrew R. Anderson. At this time Andrew A. Peterson received the appointment as jailer, the first person to serve in this capacity. On the 13th of the same month, Martin B. Bushman was placed in charge of the Estray Pound, William Clark having resigned. In October, Charles Barnes and Andrew R. Anderson resigned as Treasurer and Marshal respectively, and their places were filled by Oley Ellingson and Byron W. Brown. Frank Molen was installed as a Policeman the following January.

THE CEMETERY SURVEYED.

In May, 1872, Alderman Israel Evans and Sexton

George W. Thurman supervised the surveying of the present cemetery. It was platted with streets and blocks by William F. Greenwood of American Fork. The old burial ground had been north of the State Road and just west of Dry Creek.

THE FIRST CITY HALL BUILT.

In the summer of 1871, the City Council began the erection of the first city hall. A jail was to be placed underneath. The building was located just back of the present City Hall and cost $750.00. Israel Evans and John Woodhouse constituted the building committee from the council and supervised the work. In the construction of the hall, Abraham Enough and James Wiley Norton were the masons and Thomas Ashton, Wesley Molen, John McComie, and John Stewart, the carpenters. The council held its first meeting in the newly constructed hall, April 22, 1872.

JOHN AUSTIN.

THE CITY GROWS.

Since the surveying of the first blocks outside the city walls, the people had been gradually making their homes there. New arrivals continued to build up this part of the town and Lehi increased rapidly in population. Among the first to venture so far north were John E. Ross and his wife, who built a dugout on the lot where they have resided ever since.

JOHN JOHNSON.
ANNA JOHNSON.

At that time they were farther away from the walls than any one else and were entirely surrounded with sage brush. Joseph Ashton soon joined them and built a dugout on the corner of Third North and First East.

A beginning had also been made in settling the country west of Dry Creek, later known as the "New Survey." The first man to move west was James Gough, who, in 1868, took up some land immediately west of the creek. James T. Powell was the next to follow, John Meakin and John Johnson migrating there a few years later. The country rapidly filled up with home builders and soon became an important part of the city.

END OF JORDAN BRIDGE COMPANY.

The Jordan Bridge Company closed its career in 1871. From the beginning it had been financially profitable, so that when the Territorial Commissioner demanded that it be turned over to him as public property, the company was extremely dissatisfied. Nevertheless, the charter was repealed in 1866 by the following act of the Legislature:

An act repealing an act granting unto Charles Hopkins and others the right to build a bridge across the River Jordan.

Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah: That an act granting to Charles Hopkins and others the right to build a bridge across the River Jordan, approved Januaray 23, 1853, is hereby repealed.

Approved January 12, 1866.

The company continued to charge toll at the bridge, however, until the new bridge, built in 1871 by Utah County, was opened for general use, when the old one was torn down and its timbers distributed among the stockholders.

A SAD CHRISTMAS.

The school teacher during the winter of 1871-1872 was George William Thurman. Because of his ability as a teacher, his amiable nature as a man, and his unselfish public service as a citizen, he was universally esteemed and honored. At Christmas time Thurman had planned and was preparing a celebration for the children. Locking himself and some others in the Meeting House to make ready the Christmas tree in time for the beginning of the affair on Christmas Eve, he was busily engaged in his work of love for the little ones when the door was rudely broken open and Jed Woodward, who had formerly received some chastisement from the school-master, pushed his way in. Thurman immediately ejected him, but had no more than done so than Jed drew a revolver and shot the teacher. The death, a few hours later, of this popular young man threw the whole city into gloom and gave a sad tinge to the holiday season.*

On account of some mitigating circumstances, Woodward was sentenced only to serve ten years in prison. Taking advantage of a jail-breaking plot to help the officers, he was soon pardoned. He then moved to the southern part of the state, where, as the result of the continuation of his bullying ways, he ran foul of an officer and was instantly killed while creating a disturbance in a dance.

GEORGE WILLIAM THURMAN.

ELEVENTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The eleventh election saw the incumbent officers, who now had served four years, re-elected for the third consecutive time—William H. Winn, Mayor;

Israel Evans and John Woodhouse, Aldermen; William Clark, William Yates, and Oley Ellingson, Councilors. At the same election, February 10, 1873, John Roberts, Thomas Hawkins, and John Bushman were chosen School Trustees.*

For the first time in the history of the town, this election does not appear to have been unanimous; for upon petition of James W. Taylor and others, the Municipal Court, consisting of the mayor, aldermen and recorder, met to determine whether the new officials had been chosen according to law. After hearing evidence on both sides, the court decided that the election had been held legally. This was the only time in the history of Lehi that the Municipal Court ever convened.

On March 4, the council appointed Joseph J. H. Colledge, Recorder; Oley Ellingson, Treasurer; Peter Christofferson, Marshal; James Wiley Norton, Attorney; Jesse Smith, Supervisor; Joseph J. H. Colledge, Assessor and Collector; Joseph J. Smith, Sealer of Weights and Measures; John E. Ross, Sexton; Thomas Ashton, Inspector of Wood and Lumber; and Edward W. Edwards, Jailer. From the fact that policemen were now paid a small sum, the force was made Captain of Police. Changes during 1874 were the appointment of Samuel R. Thurman as Auditor, James W. Norton as Jailer to succeed Edward W. Edwards, and Andrew A. Peterson as Water Master, Later both Mayor Winn and Alderman Woodhouse resigned to go on missions, and their places were filled by Isaac Goodwin and Samuel R. Thurman, respectively.

NEW SCHOOLS.

As the city grew in size and population, the demand for additional schools other than the Thurman Building became increasingly great. Accordingly the School Board began, in the autumn of 1872, the erection of the Ross School House to accommodate the children in the north-east part of town. The lot had been purchased the previous summer. In 1873 the structure was completed and utilized.

A short time after the erection of the Ross Building, the City Council received a number of petitions from the people in the New Survey, or as they were called in common parlance at the time, the people "over the creek," asking that they too have a new school building for the convenience of their children. To accommodate them, the mayor purchased a lot from James P. Carter for a school site, and some years later (1875) the School Board erected a suitable building and called it the Franklin School House. This has been in almost constant use up to the present time.

TWELFTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

At the twelfth city election, held February 8, 1875, Isaac Goodwin was elected Mayor; Samuel R. Thurman and John Cherington, Aldermen; and William Goates, John E. Ross, and James T. Powell, Councilors. The appointments for the municipal offices were made at several meetings: Recorder, Joseph J. H. Colledge; Treasurer, Oley Ellingson; Marshal, Thomas Fowler; Attorney, James Wiley Norton; Supervisor, William Southwick; Assessor and Collector, Joseph J. H. Colledge; Sexton, John E. Ross; Pound Keeper, Martin B. Bushman; Water Master, William Bone, Jr.; Inspector of Wood and Lumber, Thomas Ashton; Sealer of Weights and Measures, Joseph J. Smith; Auditor, Thomas R. Cutler; Captain of Police, William Mathews; Jailer, James W. Norton; Board of Examiners, Samuel R. Thurman, John E. Ross, and John Cherington; Policemen, Martin B. Bushman and Jacob Cox. After serving a year, John Cherington resigned as Alderman and John E. Ross assumed the duties of his office, Martin B. Bushman in turn filling his place in the council. Other changes were the accession of Jacob Bushman to the office of Attorney and Thomas Fowler to the Jailer's position, the previous occupants of these offices having resigned.

THIRTEENTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The thirteenth set of city officers was chosen February 12, 1877, and was composed of William H.

SAMUEL R. THURMAN,
Eighth Mayor of Lehi,
1878-1879; 1881-1882.

Winn, Mayor; Samuel R. Thurman and Thomas R. Cutler, Aldermen; and Oley Ellingson, Charles Barnes and Thomas Ashton, Councilors.

Their appointments: Recorder, Joseph J. H. Colledge; Marshal, Thomas Fowler; Treasurer, Oley Ellingson; Assessor and Collector, Joseph J. H. Colledge; Inspector of Wood and Lumber, Thomas Ashton; Supervisor, William Southwick; Sexton, John E. Ross; Sealer of Weights and Measures, Thomas Hawkins; Jailer, Thomas Fowler; Attorney, George Webb; Water Master, William Bone, Jr.; Policeman, James T. Powell.

On October 19, Samuel R. Thurman became Mayor of Lehi through the resignation of William H. Winn, who had been called on another mission. For the same reason, Oley Ellingson resigned as Councilor and Treasurer and was succeeded by William Clark and Thomas R. Cutler, respectively. Later Mayor Thurman also filled the office of Auditor on account of the resignation of Thomas R. Cutler. To fill the vacancy in the City Council caused by the promotion of Alderman Thurman, George Webb was designated and David Evans, Jr., succeeded him as Attorney.

THE PRESENT CITY HALL BUILT.

The present City Council very early became convinced that the little adobe city hall in which they met was not sufficiently pretentious to suit the growth of the city. Accordingly, they made plans for a better building, giving Thomas Ashton authority to prepare an estimate of cost. Upon his report of $1,928.00 for a structure twenty-five feet square with a basement, they resolved to proceed, and appointed Mayor Winn and Councilors Ashton and Ellingson as a building committee. In the summer of 1877, the foundation was laid, and by the time a year had elapsed, the hall had been completed. Carlson and Andreason were the masons employed in the construction, Thomas Ashton was the chief carpenter and Joseph Trinna-man did the plastering. The City Hall is still in use by the city fathers and in a fairly good state of preservation.*

IRRIGATION LITIGATION.

Because of numerous disputes between the people of Lehi and the farmers of American Fork Bench over the right to use water from the Lehi ditch, in its course from the mouth of American Fork Canyon to Lehi, the the Lehi ditch. Oley Ellingson was at the head of a list of two hundred Lehi water users who represented the city in the suit. After a long trial, the district court, through Judge Emerson, decided in favor of Lehi, giving the city exclusive use of the Lehi ditch during July, August, and September. Although several appeals have been made, this decision is still practically the basis of water distribution.

FOURTEENTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The fourteenth civic election observed February 10, 1879, resulted in the selection of Andrew R. Anderson as Mayor; Samuel R. Thurman and George Webb as Aldermen; and Thomas R. Cutler, Samuel Taylor, and James T. Powell as Councilors. In the appointments made by the fourteenth City Council, many of the old offices were discontinued. The men selected were: John E. Ross, Recorder; Thomas Fowler, Marshal; William E. Racker, Treasurer; Joseph J. H.

Colledge, Assessor and Collector; David Evans, Jr., Attorney; John E. Ross, Auditor and Sexton; Thomas Fowler, Jailer; and Isaac Chilton, Policeman.

On account of having been selected as Bishop of the Lehi Ward to succeed David Evans, Thomas R. Cutler resigned as Councilor, after a year's service, and the vacancy thus created was filled by the selection of William Clark.* Very shortly he left the city on a mission, so Andrew A. Peterson became a member of the City Council in his place. Other changes were brought about by the resignation of Alderman Samuel R. Thurman; he was followed by Councilor Samuel Taylor, whose place was then occupied by Abel John Evans.

A CENSUS TAKEN.

It was learned now by the city officials that several tiers of blocks on the east side were on unpatented school land and that it would be necessary to determine the population of Lehi before application could be made for title to the land. In April, 1879, therefore, a census was taken, probably the first official census since the founding of the town over twenty-eight years past. The population of the city was found to be 2,026. This number was sufficient to entitle the municipal corporation to an enlargement of its townsite, so Mayor Anderson at once filed on the desired land.

The growth in population from the mere score of people around Sulphur Springs, in 1850, to the 2,026 in Lehi, thirty years later, is nothing short of phenomenal. Lured by no mining boom, the development of the city had been gradual and constant. The unusually rapid increase in numbers evidenced in these statistics surely speaks well for the type of people who came to Lehi to make their home.

FIFTEENTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

Standing—Michael Vaughn, Hyrum Andreason, Thomas Taylor, Morgan Evans, William Ball, Jr., Daniel Thomas.

Councilors, at the fifteenth city election held February 14, 1881. For the first time, the recorder, marshal, treasurer, and assessor and collector were chosen by popular vote. Selected for these offices respectively were: John E. Ross, Thomas Fowler, William E. Racker, and Joseph J. H. Colledge.

In this term, Lehi was destined to lose the help of two of her veteran public officers. After a faithful and efficient service of twenty years as recorder and assessor and collector, Joseph J. H. Colledge died, leaving the office vacant. An examination of his accounts by a committee from the City Council revealed the fact that they were in excellent condition after such a long incumbency. Thomas Fowler was designated to fill the vacancy. Isaac Chilton, who was also a veteran in the service of the city, now felt impelled by old age to resign as policeman, a position which he had filled for many years. With a vote of thanks for his efficient labor, the council accepted his resignation, appointing Hyrum Smith as his successor.

A very curious condition arose in the municipal government through the resignation, on November 22, 1882, of Mayor Thurman. The City Council did not appoint a successor, so for over two months Lehi was without a mayor. Alderman George Webb presided at meetings of the City Council during this time. No harmful results accrued from this novel experience.

NEW EDUCATIONAL METHODS.

About this time there came to Lehi a young man whose later work had a tremendous influence on the city's educational system. This was Simon P. Eggertson. Until this time, the teachers in the Lehi schools had almost universally used the old methods in teaching, methods which had for their sanction scores of years of practice in the schools of the country. It was Eggertson who substituted for them the beginnings of modern education; it was he who more than any one else laid the foundation of the school system which later has brought Lehi educational facilities up to the standard of the best schools of the State.

A CAMPAIGN FOR SHADE TREES.

The most important work performed by the fourteenth City Council was to begin the custom of planting shade trees on the sidewalks. After a thorough campaign on the subject, the council, in the spring of 1881, purchased 1,200 locust trees and distributed them at cost to the citizens. A year later they set out Lombardy poplars the whole length of Main Street. The resulting beneficial appearance of the city was inestimable.

SIMON P. EGGERTSON.

Another noteworthy action of this coterie of officers was the appropriation of $100.00 to assist the Ward Bishopric in fitting up the basement of the City Hall as a reading room. Details of this worthy project have already been noted.*

BROADBENT AND SON.

In 1882 Joseph Broadbent and his son, Joseph S. Broadbent, opened a small store on First East Street, one block north of Main. The business prospered from the first, and additions were made from time to time. The most important of these was a musical department, from which the store took its name—the Lehi Musical Emporium—for some years. The firm is still conducting its business under the same management.

JOSEPH BROADBENT,

SIXTEENTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

February 12, 1883, was the date of the sixteenth municipal election. Oley Ellingson was chosen Mayor and the other officers were: Aldermen, George Webb and Abel John Evans; Councilors, Andrew A. Peterson, Byron W. Brown, and John J. Child; Recorder, John E. Ross; Marshal, Thomas Fowler; and Treasurer, William E. Racker. The council appointed Byron W. Brown, Attorney; Loren Olmstead, Pound Keeper, and Hyrum Smith and George Beck, Policemen.

Having heard of the successful boring of artesian wells in Salt Lake County, the City Council appointed a committee to investigate the feasibility of similar action in Lehi. In its report on January 23, 1884, the committee recommended that the city purchase a well-boring machine for the use of its citizens. At a cost of $377.00 this was done. The machine was driven by horse power and was supposed to drill a well ten or twelve inches in diameter, which would be encased with wooden staves or galvanized pipe. When actually tested, the wellborer proved a complete failure.

OLEY ELLINGSON,
Tenth Mayor of Lehi,

As a result of the continued litigation with the farmers of American Fork bench over water rights, the city in 1884 bought the Pool farm, a tract of land in the very center of the disputed territory. It was placed in charge of James Southwick.

LEHI ADOPTS STANDARD TIME.

To be in accord with the rest of the country, the City Council, early in May, proclaimed the adoption of standard time, as recently determined by government observatories. It was necessary to set the clocks forward twenty-eight minutes to agree exactly with Mountain time. The change was effected May 12.

SEVENTEENTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

On February 9, 1885, the people exercised their franchise in electing city officers for the seventeenth time. Their choice for Mayor was Oley Ellingson; for Aldermen, George Webb and John E. Ross; for Councilors, Andrew A. Peterson, Samuel Taylor, and William Clark; for Recorder, Edwin Evans; for Marshal, Thomas Fowler; for Treasurer, William E. Racker; and for Assessor and Collector, Thomas Fowler. The appointive offices were filled as follows: Loren Olmstead, Pound Keeper; Samuel R. Thurman, Attorney; George Glover, Joseph Roberts, and Hyrum Smith, Policemen; and William Wanlass, Auditor.

WILLIAM CLARK.

Lehi was visited during 1885 by a severe epidemic of diphtheria. Science had not yet discovered a method of combating this dread disease successfully, hence, many deaths occurred, especially among the children. It was a rare instance where some of the little ones did not succumb when the scourge once began its inroads on the family.

By this time the three school houses in Lehi—the Thurman, Franklin, and Ross—were so crowded that additional room was imperative. To meet this need, the school trustees, George Webb, Andrew A. Peterson, and James P. Carter, secured the use of the City Hall in October, 1886. From this time until the Central School was erected, in 1892, school was held every year in the City Hall.

THE "UNDERGROUND."

All over Utah there began now a zealous prosecution of the recent enactments of Congress against polygamy. In common with other towns in the Territory, Lehi received frequent visits from Federal officials in search of "cohabs." Many instances, both tragic and humorous, transpired during the course of these prosecutions, which are intensely interesting and sometimes ludicrous to the later observer. For instance, it is related that a Federal officer came to a certain home in Lehi in search of the father, but the only person he could find around the place was a boy about ten years old. Thinking to obtain some information that might be valuable, the officer asked the boy if he knew where any polygamists were. After a long pause, accompanied by much scratching of the head and digging of the bare toes into the earth, on the part of the child, his eyes suddenly brightened, he vigorously nodded his head and answered that he could take the officer to the hiding place of a polygamist. Thinking that at last he was about to make an arrest and secure the accompanying reward, the visitor quickly dismounted and eagerly followed the boy around the house. Gravely leading him to the barn and with the utmost caution opening the gate to the yard, the boy proudly pointed to the object of their search; and there with head erect and in the midst of his cowering wives, stood the polygamist—a rooster.

EIGHTEENTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The election held February 9, 1887, was the eighteenth in the history of the city. George Webb was elected Mayor; Samuel Taylor and Abel John Evans, Aldermen; Andrew A. Peterson, Jesse Smith, and John Woodhouse, Councilors; John E. Ross, Recorder; Thomas Fowler, Marshal; William E. Racker, Treasurer; and Thomas Fowler, Assessor and Collector. The council appointed Michael Vaughn, Pound Keeper; Loren Olmstead, Supervisor; Hyrum Smith and Joseph Roberts, Policemen; and John Woodhouse, Attorney.

Two of this number resigned: William E. Racker as Treasurer, his successor being John Roberts, Jr., and Thomas Fowler, who accepted the position of county sheriff and moved to Provo. Joseph Roberts became Marshal in his place.

This City Council did many things while in office, among them being the sale of the Pool farm to Thomas R. Cutler for $2,000.00, the planting of trees around the cemetery, the selling of the useless well driver at public auction, the purchase of the Kelly place for use as a public park,* and the opening up of various streets for use, notably, the street leading to the sugar factory, the street leading at present to the Sego Lily School House and, by repairing, the street leading from the State Road to the cemetery.

GEORGE WEBB,
Eleventh Mayor of Lehi,
1887-1889.

A CURFEW LAW PASSED.

In compliance with a petition signed by a large number of citizens, the City Council, on July 18, passed a curfew law which provided that children under sixteen were prohibited from being on the streets after nine o'clock without a guardian. The mayor was authorized to purchase a bell for use as a signal in the execution of this law. Ever since its installation in the belfry of the City Hall, this bell has sent its silver notes out over the city, warning many a wayward youth that his steps should be turned homeward. It has also been used as a fire alarm.

TELEPHONE.

In 1888 the telephone reached Lehi. The first instrument was installed in the People's Co-op. For a number of years it was maintained as a toll station. Clarence A. Granger was the first individual subscriber. When more people had begun to use telephones, a switchboard was built by the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Company in the Union Hotel. Birdie Stoddard was the first operator and continued as the operating director for many years. In 1906 the company erected a building on Main Street and installed a modern switchboard and equipment.* It is now the Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Company.

NINETEENTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The nineteenth election of city officers, observed February 11, 1889, placed in office Samuel Taylor as Mayor; George Webb and Edwin Evans as Aldermen; William H. Winn, Jr., Andrew A. Peterson, and Jesse Smith as Councilors; John E. Ross as Recorder; Joseph Roberts as Marshal; John Roberts, Jr., as Treasurer; and John Woodhouse as Assessor and Collector. The council appointed Loren Olmstead as Supervisor, and Michael Vaughn as Pound Keeper. The only change in this set of officers was the resignation of Edwin Evans who after a year of service went to Paris to study art.*

SECTIONAL RIVALRY IN LEHI.

The City Council soon entangled itself in a bitter controversy by the purchase of a lot in the north part of town upon which to erect a jail—the corner of First East and Fifth North. The long pent-up bitterness and rivalry between the upper and lower parts of town soon came to a head over this matter. James Harwood headed a petition of one hundred names to the City Council protesting against the building of a jail at a point so far north. Immediately, William E. Racker, together with ninety-two signers, sent in a petition congratulating the council upon its choice. A bitter discussion ensued which did not cease during the incumbency of the nineteenth administration. Although the council valiantly remained with its original intention, and even went so far as to purchase a steel cage, it was never installed on the original lot; for the succeeding council built a jail on the old estray pound lot—where now stands the new Grammar School Building—and the cage was used in a temporary jail in the City Hall. This sectional fight raged for a long time with periods of intense bitterness recurring only too often. Indeed, it has been the most detrimental factor in the growth of the city. "Up town" and "Down town," in their internal bickerings, have prevented development that otherwise would not only have been possible but certain. Of late years, the rivalry has to some extent diminished, a gratifying and hopeful sign. Its complete banishment were a boon to the city.

JAMES T. POWELL.

THE STREETS NAMED.

A noteworthy achievement of the nineteenth council was the naming and lighting of the streets. Main Street, so called so long "that the memory of man runneth not back to the contrary," was made the starting point for the streets running east and west; for example, the first street north of Main was called First North, the next, Second North, and the first street south of Main, First South. For the streets running north and south, Center Street—that street now running between the Tabernacle and the Primary School Building—was made the starting point; thus the first street paralleling Center on the west is First West, and the first one on the east is First East.

As an initial attempt to light the streets of Lehi, the council, in September, 1890, placed twenty-six gasoline street lamps at various corners.

It was this City Council also which first made an effort to obtain the proposed sugar factory at Lehi.*

The Church in Lehi.

THERE is only one example in the annals of America of the organization of a commonwealth upon principles of pure theocracy. There is here one example only where the founding of a state grew out of the founding of a new religion." So says Hubert Howe Bancroft, the great American historian, and in these illuminating sentences he proceeds to the very heart of historical matters in the founding of Utah. It is here that the history of the State differs from all others, that it furnishes problems dissimilar to those met elsewhere.

It is impossible to estimate the extent to which the church influenced the lives of the pioneers of this Commonwealth. Migrating here through a religious motive, their belief continued to be the dominating factor in all their affairs. The church preceded all other organizations, whether political or social; it was the center of all activities; around it everything else was built. True it is that later political institutions were notable for their substantiality, vigor and strength, yet it was to their ecclesiastical leaders that the people looked ultimately for advice and leadership.

A factor of such importance cannot be neglected in considering the growth of a Utah town, especially a rural community like Lehi. Here also, religion was the dominating influence in the lives of the people. This, then, is sufficient justification for an effort to trace its development and chronicle its history, and that without considering in the least the purely dogmatic side.

Mention has already been made of instances in which the church and its officials have been intimately involved. Apart from such events is the history of the church itself, the record of its growth and expansion. This it is proposed to discuss now. Naturally it is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—the Mormons—which must necessarily be the subject of most of this study, but due consideration will also be given to the work of another denomination, the Congregationalists, who in later times established a mission and school in Lehi.

BISHOP DAVID EVANS.

Mention has already been made of the arrival of Bishop David Evans, February 15, 1851.* At once he became the directing personality in the little settlement, and led the people in their struggle to obtain a foothold on Dry Creek. For this work he was eminently qualified, sturdy, determined, plain, outspoken, resourceful, a pioneer in every respect. Soon after his arrival, the Dry Creek Ward was organized with David Evans as Bishop, Charles Hopkins and David Savage as Counselors, and Jehial McConnell as ward clerk. For twenty-eight years Bishop Evans held this position, during the whole time when the infant city was struggling against colossal hardships, when it gained its feet sufficiently to combat the Indians and grasshoppers, when it acquired stability enough to make the future look hopeful, and finally when it blossomed into a flourishing city—a wonderful transformation from the Evansville of 1851 to the Lehi of 1879.

FIRST CHANGE IN THE BISHOPRIC.

In 1852 Jehial McConnell and Lorenzo H. Hatch were set apart as First and Second Counselors to Bishop Evans, Charles Hopkins and David Savage having been released for other work in the church.*

LEHI'S FIRST MISSIONARIES.

It was also at this time that the first missionaries were sent out. Canute Peterson went to Norway, William Fotheringham to India, Thomas Karren to the Sandwich Islands, and Preston Thomas to Texas—truly a widely scattered field.† These first envoys of the Church have been succeeded by many scores of faithful and zealous elders, but it is doubtful if any left their homes under such extreme hardships—a little village, founded in a desert and in its second year of struggle for existence, able to send men to such widely divergent places as India, Norway and Hawaii!

*This other work was in the presidency of the Lehi Ward, an organization supposed to be equal in authority to the Bishopric. Such a presidency was a common practice in the Church in early days. Charles Hopkins was President, David Savage was First Counselor and Samuel D. White Second Counselor. So much friction arose with the Bishopric that the office of president was soon abolished, his functions passing to the Bishop.

†The next year, 1853, Israel Evans went to Wales on a mission.

Such devotion speaks well for the vitality and strength of the religious beliefs of Lehi's founders.

JEHIAL McCONNELL RESIGNS.

In 1853, Jehial McConnell resigned as First Counselor in the Bishopric in order to move to southern Utah. Lorenzo H. Hatch was promoted to be First and Abel Evans chosen to be Second Counselor in the subsequent reorganization.

QUORUMS ORGANIZED.

No further changes were made in the constituency of the ward leaders during the next ten years, but this period was a time of substantial progress and growth. The Meeting House was erected in 1855, and numerous expeditions sent out to aid immigrants, beginning in 1856. January 17, 1858, the first elders' quorum was organized,* while four years later, in November, 1862, the sixty-eighth quorum of seventy was installed.†

COUNSELOR HATCH MOVES TO CACHE VALLEY.

In 1863, First Counselor Lorenzo H. Hatch moved to Cache Valley, thus creating a vacancy in the Bishopric. To fill this, Abel Evans was promoted to the office of First Counselor, and Canute Peterson selected as Second Counselor.

†The officers were: J. R. Murdock, O. C. Murdock, John C. Nagle, Israel Evans, John Brown, J. R. Moyle of Alpine, and W. S. S. Willes; the members: William Southwick, Samuel James, Oley Ellingson, Jacob Bushman, William H. Winn, Edwin Standring, Michael Vaughn, John Jacobs, James P. Carter, Robert Stoney, J. Abrams, H. A. Wedge, T. R. Jones, E. Watsons, L. Titcomb, E. M. Allison, William A. Bell, John Andreason, William Gurney, and Jens Holm.

ABEL EVANS—A MISSIONARY TO WALES.

The Bishopric continued without change as to membership until May, 1865, when First Counselor Abel Evans left Lehi for a mission to Wales, his native country. Canute Peterson then became First Counselor and Thomas Karren Second Counselor.

After eighteen months of missionary labor, Counselor Evans contracted a severe cold which later proved fatal, his death occurring November 30, 1866. A month afterwards, when the sad news reached Lehi, it cast a feeling of gloom over the entire community. Abel Evans had been a man of exceptional worth to the people of Lehi, because of his integrity, uprightness, and devotion to duty.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ORGANIZED.

Although a temporary Sunday School organization had been effected in 1851, it was not permanently organized until 1866.* At that time, James W. Taylor, William Yates, and William Gurney became interested in the possibilities of such a school, and advocated its adoption. At first meeting with little response, it was soon recognized that the hitherto free Sunday afternoons might be profitably utilized; so the organization followed. James W. Taylor was Superintendent of the first school, Daniel S. Thomas, Israel Evans, Martin B. Bushman, Rebecca Standring, Margaret Taylor (Mrs. Ira D. Wines), and Mrs. Elisha H. Davis were teachers, and approximately twenty-five pupils attended. For lack of other books, the children studied reading and spelling. Among the later Sunday School workers of that period might be mentioned James Kirkham, Joseph Broadbent, Charles Phillips, and James Gough.

WILLIAM H. WINN A NEW COUNSELOR.

In 1867, First Counselor Canute Peterson was called to become bishop of the ward at Ephraim, so he resigned his position with Bishop Evans. Second Counselor Thomas Karren succeeded him and he, in turn, was followed by William H. Winn. No further change occurred for ten years.

OTHER ORGANIZATIONS FOUNDED.

The Woman's Relief Society was first organized in Lehi, in 1868.* It has since built a meeting house of its own and possesses several granaries. It has done much to alleviate distress and misfortune among the poor of the city.

Both teachers'† and high priests'‡ quorums date their organization from 1869, the former on November 28, while the exact time of the latter's first meeting is unknown.

The year 1871 saw the inception of the first deacons' quorum.§ The initial meeting was held March 7.

*In the first imperfect organization, Sarah J. Coleman was president and Rebecca Standring counselor. On October 27, 1868, the organization was perfected. Sarah J. Coleman was president, Martha P. Thomas and Barbara Ann Evans were counselors, and Rebecca Standring and Mary Ann Davis acted as secretary and treasurer, respectively.

†The members were: William Yates, William Clark, William Gurney, Isaac Goodwin, William Goates Sen., Charles Barnes, John Zimmerman, Oley Ellingson, William Southwick, William Ball, and Jacob Bushman. The first three named constituted the presidency; Charles Barnes was secretary.

‡January 3, 1869, is the date of the first meeting that this quorum is known to have held. It had forty-two members enrolled, with Daniel S. Thomas as president and Joseph J. H. Colledge as secretary.

§Andrew A. Peterson, John Jacobs, Jacob Bushman, Elisha Peck, J. L. Rosbottom, Jacob Cox, Peter Peterson, Andrew R. Anderson, Newal A. Brown, George Kirkham, and Martin B. Bushman constituted this quorum. The first four named were the presiding officers and secretary.

The Young Ladies' Retrenchment Society made its appearance in Lehi, April 23, 1875.* This organization was later succeeded by the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Association. Both this and the similar society, the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association, which was founded in 1875, have had much to do with the social and intellectual activities of the younger people in the city. Samuel R. Thurman was the first president of the latter. At various times they have maintained a free reading room, and conducted the public dances.

The Primary Association was established in 1878.†

DEATH OF COUNSELOR THOMAS KARREN.

On April 4, 1877, First Counselor Thomas Karren passed to the Great Beyond. William H. Winn was promoted to fill the vacancy caused by his death, and William Goates was designated Second Counselor.

*Orinda Davis (Mrs. Delbert H. Allred), was president.

BISHOP THOMAS R. CUTLER.

REORGANIZATION.

This arrangement continued for one year, when a disagreement arose between Bishop Evans and Counselor Winn which resulted in the relieving of the latter of his position. In the reorganization which followed, William Goates was made First Counselor and Andrew R. Anderson Second Counselor.

THOMAS R. CUTLER SUCCEEDS BISHOP EVANS.

By this time Bishop Evans had become an aged man, and with the addition of poor health to interfere with his duties, he concluded to resign. On September 21, 1879, after twenty-eight years of service such as few men have had the opportunity and ability to give, he was honorably released from his position. For his successor was chosen Thomas R. Cutler, and associated with him William H. Winn and Andrew R. Anderson as counselors. Bishop Cutler had come to Lehi fourteen years previously and engaged in the mercantile business for T. and W. Taylor. Later he had become the head of the People's Co-operative Institution. His business training and his native ability qualified him eminently to lead the affairs of the ward under the new conditions which he was later to meet. Like his predecessor, Bishop Cutler served the people of Lehi as their ecclesiastical leader during an extended period, his incumbency measuring twenty-four years. He saw the city grow from a town in the infancy of business development to the commercial, industrial, and agricultural center that is modern Lehi.

One of the first official acts of the new bishop was the building of a tithing office on Second East, midway between State Street and Sixth North. Only a barn was moved from the old tithing office lot. James Kirkham was named tithing clerk.*

DEATH OF BISHOP EVANS.

After a strenuous and well-spent life of almost eighty years, former Bishop David Evans passed away June 23, 1883. He was buried with great honors, a special train bringing prominent Church and State officials from Salt Lake and other parts of the Territory.

DEATH OF COUNSELOR WINN.

Bishop Evans was soon followed to the domains of the Grim Reaper by his former counselor, William H. Winn. His death occurred April 26, 1884. Andrew R. Anderson now became First Counselor, and Edwin Standring Second Counselor.

ANOTHER DEATH IN THE BISHOPRIC.

On November 13, 1888, Counselor Edwin Standring died, leaving another vacancy in the Bishopric. William Clark was selected to occupy his place.

NORTH-WEST BRANCH ORGANIZED.

Because of their partial isolation from the main body of church members, and because of their ever-increasing numbers, the people in the north-west part of town—called variously the New Survey, Lehi Junction, and “Over the Creek”—desired to have a branch organization of their own. Their request was granted, and on October 1, 1893, the North-west Branch was organized with Thomas R. Jones as president. Later he was succeeded by W. W. Clark. One year later the branch began the erection of a meeting house which has been in use ever since.

THE NEW TABERNACLE.

The need for a new meeting place had now long been apparent. The old Meeting House was entirely inadequate to seat the great number of worshipers who thronged there every Sunday; and the pride of the people demanded a larger and more modern structure. For many years there had been only talk and desire for a new chapel; the erection of a tabernacle in Provo proved to be all the burden the church members in Lehi could carry. Finally, when the assessment from Provo had been met, the movement for a tabernacle in Lehi assumed definite form. A committee was appointed by Bishop Cutler, consisting of himself, Henry Lewis, E. A. Bushman, Jr., Elias Jones, Heber Austin, Mark Austin, and Franz Salzner, who were to have entire charge of the building operations.

The first move of the committee was to secure a lot. After numerous conferences and investigations of proposed sites, the lot on the north-east corner of Center and Second North Streets was purchased and cleared. The consideration of plans for the building was the next step. After an extensive study of the work of many architects, the plans of R. Kletting* were accepted. To raise the necessary money was now the formidable task which confronted the committee. Steps were soon taken to levy assessments against the members of the ecclesiastical ward in such amount as, in the judgment of the committee, they could consistently meet. The payment of these assessments lasted through many years, but were in the end met.

Work on the excavation began in February, 1900. Much of it was performed without remuneration, and

*He later drew the plans for the State Capitol.

provision was also made that assessments could be paid in labor. The laying of the foundation, which was of cement and limestone, was under the direction of John Donaldson. In eighteen months this part of the building had been completed, so that on September 14, 1901, the corner stone could be laid. Lorenzo Snow, at that time President of the Mormon Church, was invited to officiate at the exercises, but in his enforced absence, Bishop Thomas R. Cutler swung into place the large block on the south-west corner. The occasion was marked by the attendance of most of the citizens and by appropriate exercises.

The following years witnessed the continuation of the work of construction. The masons were in charge of Elias Jones, while Monroe Wilson directed the carpenter work on the outside. John S. Willes erected the rostrum, and Fred Merrill and William Turner performed the plastering. The walls were built of white pressed brick. The building as completed is 121 feet in length and 76 feet in width, the dimensions of the main auditorium being 80 feet and 60 feet. The tower rises to the height of 112 feet. The seating capacity of the Tabernacle is 1100, and its total cost $46,000.00.

In five years the erection of the building had progressed to such a stage that meetings could be held in it. September 3, 1905, was the date of the initial gathering, a notable event in the life of the city. To observe the occasion fittingly, elaborate exercises were prepared, and numerous distinguished visitors entertained. From that date, assemblies of all kinds—religious, political, civic, patriotic, educational—have been held in the Tabernacle.

The crowning feature of the building is the giant pipe organ which was installed soon after the Tabernacle began to be utilized for public meetings. This instrument cost $3,700.00; is 19 feet high, 8 feet deep, 20 feet wide, and weighs 9 tons. It consists of three organs—great, swell, and pedal, and has 13 couplers and a total of 792 pipes.

Five years more were necessary before the Tabernacle was completed. On Sunday, May 15, 1910, the building was dedicated by Joseph F. Smith, president of the Latter-day Saints, amid the intense gratification of the people who had labored so long to erect the magnificent structure.

The basement is fitted up with an auditorium and various small rooms, which are used as the assembly rooms of the Second Ward.

COUNSELOR CLARK RESIGNS.

On account of old age and failing health, Second Counselor William Clark resigned on November 23, 1902. His successor in the office was Andrew Fjeld, a son of Carl J. E. Fjeld (the hand cart veteran), a native of Lehi, and long one of the most active church workers in the ward.

LEHI WARD DIVIDED.

The time had now come when the growth of the Lehi Ward had placed it out of all bounds of administration, under the existing system. It was imperative that it be divided. Accordingly, on December 20, 1903, a meeting of all church members was held, and plans for the segregation were announced. The Northwest Branch was to become the Third Ward, the north-east part of town was to be called the Fourth Ward, the southern and older section of the city was designated the First Ward, and the north central part received the name of Second Ward. Four men with counselors were selected to preside over the new wards, and steps taken fully to get the new organizations and business under way. The new bishops did not assume the duties of their offices until January 1, 1904.

A later concerted action of the wards was the pur-

THE FIRST WARD.

BISHOP ANDREW FJELD.

Ward with George Schow and R. John Whipple as his counselors. Bishop Fjeld had been counselor to Bishop Cutler, and by natural ability and faithful training was thoroughly fitted for his new work. The ward now took possession of the old Meeting House, and held their assemblies there. No changes have been made in the Bishopric, and the ward since its beginning has experienced a time of continual advancement and progress.

THE SECOND WARD.

For bishop of the Second Ward was chosen James H. Gardner, with Andrew C. Pearson and William F. Gurney as counselors. Bishop Gardner was then and is now the superintendent of the Lehi sugar factory. He had made his home in the city in 1890, when the factory was built, having learned the sugar business while on a mission in Hawaii. His previous active work in church affairs and his natural endowment of executive ability qualified him to perform the functions of his office successfully. The Second Ward adapted the basement of the New Tabernacle for its assembly rooms, meeting with the First Ward conjointly once every Sunday. On July 8, 1906, First Counselor Andrew C. Pearson resigned to become superintendent of the sugar factory at Nampa, Idaho. To fill the vacancy created by his removal, Counselor Gurney was promoted and James M. Kirkham became Second Counselor. Later, on January 20, 1913, the latter accepted a call to a position in the Alpine Stake Sunday School; his successor is John W. Wing, Jr.

BISHOP JAMES H. GARDNER.

THE THIRD WARD.

The three men chosen for the Bishopric of the Third Ward were Henry Lewis, George Glover, and Jackson Wanlass. Bishop Lewis had performed some meritorious work in connection with the quorums of boys and young men, and his ability demonstrated in this capacity was undoubtedly among the causes of his call to change his residence from the heart of the city to the old North-west Branch and become the head of the new ward created there. The chapel of the branch was taken over by the ward as its place of meeting. On August 14, 1910, the Bishopric was reorganized, both Counselor Glover and Counselor Wanlass being honorably released. In their places, W. W. Dickerson and William Hatfield were named.

THE FOURTH WARD.

For a number of years before the division of the Lehi Ward, John Stoker had been tithing clerk, and it was his faithfulness in this position that made him the logical man for bishop of the Fourth Ward. As his counselors were chosen Robert Fox and Samuel Smith. At first the ward held its meetings in the Lehi Commercial and Savings Bank Building, but in May, 1909, the corner stone for a new ward chapel was laid. It is now near completion. Because of necessary absence from home, James Clark, December 3, 1905, succeeded Counselor Smith in the Bishopric.

THE NEW WEST CHURCH AND SCHOOL.

In 1880, the New West Educational Commission, with headquarters in Boston, founded a mission school in Lehi for the purpose of furnishing better educational facilities to the young men and women of the city. Securing a lot on Main Street, the Commission sent to Lehi as its first teachers Miss Carter and Miss Winslow. These ladies began school in the cottage with four pupils—Lily Harwood, Rose Harwood, Minnie Wines and Eugene Wines. At first the work was wholly of a high school character, but gradually it was enlarged until it included all the grades, and finally the high school division was dropped. It was early demonstrated that the cottage was too small for the attendance, so funds were solicited in the East, and a school house erected; it has since been called the New West School. In its early stages, the school was well attended. In later years, it passed out of the control of the New West Commission and was taken over by the Congregational Church, which has since maintained it. In addition to the school work, the church conducts religious services during the school year, and at various times has had ministers in residence.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Beet Sugar Industry.

WHEN the sugar factory was built in Lehi, in 1890, there was added to the city its most important commercial factor. Immediately an impetus was given to all business in the town. Lehi became widely known as the first sugar city in the West. The factory has since continued to be her chief claim to more than ordinary distinction, while the industry has brought immense benefits, not only to the municipality itself, but to the whole surrounding country.

PRELIMINARY STEPS.

The story of the steps which led up to the erection of the factory in Lehi is best told in the words of Thomas R. Cutler, Manager of the Utah-Idaho Sugar Company.

“The first attempt at making beet sugar in Utah was in 1852, when President John Taylor, Elias Morris and others brought some machinery from France and across the plains by ox teams.* This attempt, however, proved a failure, and some of the remnants

*This factory was in the south-eastern part of Salt Lake City, and from it the district called Sugar House gets its name. Settlers in Lehi planted some of the beet seed brought to Utah in this venture. See Chapter V.

of this machinery may be seen amongst other relics in the Deseret Museum.

"Of course this machinery was not at all modern and was what is called the 'Open Kettle Plan,' which could not be used in the production of beet sugar.

"Some years<sup>1855</sup> afterward, Arthur Stayner conceived the idea of sorghum sugar, and quantities of sorghum cane were planted in the State. He did produce a brown sugar and obtained a prize of $5,000.00 from the Legislature.

"A committee was appointed to visit Fort Scott, Kansas, where a sorghum sugar factory had been running for a period of years, but when the committee reached the place, the company was about to dissolve. It was decided, because of early frosts in the higher altitude, that sorghum cane could not be depended upon in large quantities for the purpose desired; and that idea was abandoned.

"After these investigations, the prominent people who had taken part in the experiments got together, formed a company called the Utah Sugar Company, and built the first sugar factory in the Rocky Mountains, located in Lehi, in 1890.

"There was one factory in the United States that had been running for one year previous to this, located at Grand Island, Nebraska, and owned by the Oxnards; also one at Alvarado, California, that had been in operation under various vicissitudes for several years and, notwithstanding that the government of the United States had passed a bounty law offering two cents per pound for all the sugar produced by beet factories for a period of years, capital was slow to avail itself of the opportunity. * * * * *

CITY COUNCIL OFFERS BOUNTY.

To induce the recently organized Utah Sugar Company to erect its plant in Lehi, the City Council offered them, on August 20, 1890, a bounty of $1,000.00. The following 6th of January this amount was increased $6,000.00, promised by a committee of the citizens which had been appointed to make additional efforts to secure the factory. John Beck also worked hard to obtain the factory for Lehi. Finally the company decided that the Lehi offer was the most attractive and selected that city as the site of the first factory in the West.

*From an article in the Richfield Reaper.

Additional information on this point is given by Albert F. Philips, in The Salt Lake Tribune, October 1, 1907:

“Experiments in the manufacture of beet sugar in the United States were made in 1830, a company being formed in Philadelphia, but little was accomplished, only a few hundred pounds of sugar being made. Several years later at Northampton, Massachusetts, another beet sugar factory was started. But 1,300 pounds of sugar were made and in 1840 its owner, David L. Child, abandoned the plant.

“In Utah the third attempt at manufacturing sugar from beets was made. This was in 1852 and 1853. A plant was purchased in England [should be France.- H. G.] and shipped to Provo, but it was never started.”

THE FACTORY BUILT.

Because of the large supply of water available in the so-called "Mill Pond," the Utah Sugar Company purchased from Thadeus Powell the site of the old Mulliner flour mill, which, together with the adjoining land, made an ideal location for a sugar factory.

JOHN BECK.

The corner stone was laid, December 26, 1890, by President Wilford Woodruff of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, which had invested heavily in the new industry to assist it.* After the ceremonies at the factory, a lunch was served in the Opera House and a celebration carried out in honor of the beginning of an enterprise that was to mean much to the city's future. The contract for the construction of the plant had been given to E. H. Dyer & Sons, of Cleveland, Ohio. Immediately they began the work of building, an operation that furnished much employment to laboring men in Lehi. With its machinery, the factory cost $500,000.00.

*The weather on this day and the rest of the winter was especially propitious, so much so that work on the walls was carried on with only few intermissions.

THE FIRST CAMPAIGN.

In the spring of 1891, the first beet seed was planted by George Austin on land belonging to George Comer. The event was a notable one, many people, including Manager Thomas R. Cutler of the Utah Sugar Company, being present to watch the operation of the planter. From the crop in Lehi and surrounding towns sufficient beets were harvested to conduct the factory through its first campaign, in the fall of 1891. The result was about 1,000,000 pounds of refined granulated sugar which was immediately placed on the local and outside markets. Every autumn since that year has seen the plant going at full capacity, transforming the juice of the beets, by means of its myriads of mysterious processes, into pure white crystals of sugar. The total output of sugar since the beginning has been 377,935,200 pounds.*

CLARENCE A. GRANGER.

*"Utah and Idaho comprise a large, contiguous sugar beet area and in the richness of the sugar content these states are only rivaled by California. The present sugar production within these states is four times the domestic consumption, and yet the capacity of the nine factories in operation is considerably larger than the supply of beets from the 48,000 acres in cultivation." George Thomas Surface in "The Story of Sugar," p. 125.

OFFICERS OF THE COMPANY.

Since the organization of the first company, Thomas R. Cutler has acted as its manager, directing the affairs of the Utah Sugar Company and its successor, the Utah-Idaho Sugar Company, with efficiency and success. He still holds the position of manager in addition to being vice-president. In 1903, because of the ever increasing territory embraced in the business operations of the company, he moved to Salt Lake City where the central offices had been established.

Clarence A. Granger of Alvarado, California, was the first superintendent of the Lehi factory, occupying the position until 1897, when he accepted a similar position in Greeley, Colorado. Hy A. Vallez, a native of France, was his successor. In 1899, Vallez moved to Michigan, and James H. Gardner became superintendent; he has held the position ever since. Superintendent Gardner is a Utah man who learned the sugar business in the Hawaiian Islands while on a mission. This knowledge enabled him to secure a position when the new factory was erected. At the present time, besides acting as superintendent of the Lehi factory, he is General Consulting Superintendent of the company and a member of the Technical Board which directs the operation of the plants.

The first agricultural superintendent of the Utah Sugar Company was George Austin. In 1892, he became General Consulting Agricultural Superintendent and later moved to Salt Lake City. His brother, Heber Austin, filled the vacancy caused by his promotion. When, in 1896, Heber Austin went on a mission to England, Mark Austin became agricultural superintendent. In 1904, Mark Austin became Resident Manager of the sugar factory at Sugar City, Idaho, and his place was filled in Lehi by Parley Austin, who still holds the position.

M. W. Ingalls has acted as the chief engineer of the Lehi factory since its erection, but in addition he is at present General Consulting Engineer of the whole company and a member of the Technical Board.

GROWTH OF THE INDUSTRY FROM LEHI.

Although experiencing some difficulty at first, the sugar industry in Lehi has from the beginning been an unqualified success. When it had been thoroughly demonstrated that beet sugar could be produced profitably in the Great Basin, the Utah Sugar Company began to expand. It established cutting stations in Bingham Junction, Springville, and Provo and constructed pipe lines through which the extracted juice was pumped to the Lehi factory. This was now enlarged to handle the additional supply of juice. After a few years, the Bingham Junction station was abandoned and moved to Spanish Fork. Finally, in 1903, the Utah Sugar Company constructed a new factory in Garland, Utah. This was followed by other factories in Idaho Falls, Sugar City, Blackfoot (by purchase), and Nampa, Idaho, and Elsinore and Payson, Utah. Thus from the parent factory in Lehi has grown a system of sugar plants all over the Rocky Mountain region, both from the Utah-Idaho Sugar Company and the Amalgamated Sugar Company. And although the old mill in Lehi is far from the most modern plant of the system, still it produces as high a grade of sugar as any of its younger rivals, and does its work more expeditiously and efficiently.

EFFECTS ON LEHI.

The establishment of the sugar industry in Lehi has been a tremendous boon to its growth. Thousands of dollars have been paid every year for beets to the farmers and hardly a less sum to laboring men. Every campaign the factory employs three hundred men, most of whom are from Lehi. What this means not only to the laborers themselves but also to the business of the city can hardly be estimated. There can be no doubt but that the sugar industry has been the most important element in the commercial growth of Lehi.

But the commercial gain is not the only effect the factory has had upon the municipality. It has brought many people to Lehi and sent a far greater number out to other places. When new factories have been established, most of the responsible positions have been given to Lehi men who had learned their business in the Lehi factory. Thus there are little Lehi colonies wherever new factories have been constructed in Utah and Idaho. Not only this, but a great demand has existed for experienced agricultural advisers who had been successful in raising beets in Lehi. To supply this demand has been the cause of many removals of Lehi families to neighboring and even distant states. On the whole, therefore, Lehi has played an exceptional part in developing the sugar industry in the West, even at the loss of some of her very best citizens.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Prosperity.

WITH the establishment of the sugar factory in Lehi there began an unprecedented era of business growth. New enterprises of various kinds were set on foot, and on every side could be seen the evidences of prosperity. Especially was this true of the business portion of the city on State Street. Here within a short time were founded the town's first bank, the first pretentious hotel, and a second livery stable.

LEHI COMMERCIAL AND SAVINGS BANK.

In 1891, Thomas R. Cutler, Ira D. Wines, William E. Racker, and William Clark, together with a number of Salt Lake City capitalists, organized the first banking company in Lehi—the Lehi Commercial and Savings Bank. The company at once began the erection of a brick and stone building on the corner of State Street and Second East which was finished the next year, when the doors were opened for business. Oley Ellingson, Jr., was the first cashier, and his successors have been John Y. Smith, under whose direction a branch was established in American Fork and a re-incorporation under the name of the Utah Banking Company effected, Charles C. Friel, and at present William E. Evans. On January 23, 1911, the bank closed its doors and went into the hands of a receiver for a period of approximately a year, since when it has been in constant operation.

THE UNION HOTEL.

In the same year which saw the launching of a bank, Thomas R. Cutler, Ira D. Wines, and William E. Racker erected the Union Hotel, a two-story brick structure, on the corner of State and First East Streets. For many years Robert Stoddard was the genial manager of this hostelry and it enjoyed an excellent reputation and a profitable clientage. Later, however, it proved an unsatisfactory investment, and was finally closed. In 1909, Ira D. Wines renovated the building thoroughly and installed new furnishings, since when the hotel has again enjoyed some measure of prosperity. It is now owned by the People's Co-operative Institution.

A SECOND LIVERY STABLE.

It was in 1890 that the People's Co-operative Institution built a commodious livery stable on the southwest corner of Second East and State Streets and installed Charles Barnes as manager, with an equipment of twelve horses. After one year, William Wing succeeded Barnes and continued to have charge of the establishment until 1905, when Hammer Brothers secured possession of it. The business was continued by them until 1909, when it was sold to Elam Foutz, who had the bulidings torn down.

THE LEHI BANNER.

On Monday, June 1, 1891, the Lehi Banner made its first appearance. It was a weekly devoted to the interests of the city. At first owned by the Lehi Publishing Company, it was later acquired by George Webb, who from the first had acted as editor. He continued publishing the paper until 1905, when it was leased to James M. Kirkham. At the expiration of one year, Kirkham bought the entire plant and issued the paper himself. Until 1908, The Banner had a home of its own on First East Street, between Third and Fourth North, but at that time it was moved to the James Kirkham & Sons Building, on First East and Sixth North. The plant was considerably enlarged with modern printing appliances, and in connection with The Banner, the Deseret Farmer was published. In 1913, the paper was sold to the Alpine Publishing Company.

TWENTIETH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

For some elections previous to the twentieth there had been slight factional lines drawn between the Liberal Party, whose first meeting was held in Lehi

September 22, 1882, and the People's Party, but the Liberal strength was only nominal, the nomination on the People's Party ticket always insuring election. In the nominating caucus of this party, for the approaching election in 1891, a very spirited contest developed. For some time the younger men in the city had been conducting a civil government class to acquaint themselves with the theory of politics. Now they determined to apply their knowledge and use their class as a vehicle to carry out their plans. Accordingly they appeared at the nominating caucus at the Meeting House, February 2, thoroughly organized to annex the whole ticket of nominees. Taking the convention by storm, they succeeded, much to the surprise and chagrin of their elder co-partizans, in almost carrying out their purpose. A week later the election followed. Abel John Evans was chosen Mayor; William

ABEL JOHN EVANS,
Thirteenth Mayor of Lehi (1891-1893).

S. Evans, Joseph Goates, James B. Gaddie, Louis Garff, John Woodhouse, Oley Ellingson, and Thomas F. Trane, Councilors (the legislature had in 1888 abolished the office of alderman, so none were chosen at this election); John E. Ross, Recorder; Edwin Goodwin, Marshal; John Roberts, Jr., Treasurer; and Byron W. Brown, Justice.

Appointments were, Prime Evans, Attorney; John Worlton, Supervisor; and John E. Ross, Pound Keeper. As Byron W. Brown failed to qualify as Justice, L. Benjamin Willes was appointed, but after a few months' service he resigned in favor of Edward Smith. At a later date, Hyrum Timothy succeeded Edwin Goodwin as Marshal and John R. Gurney followed John E. Ross as Pound Keeper.

Shortly after its induction into office, the City Council cleared all the platted streets, and opened up a number of new thoroughfares.

PRESIDENT HARRISON VISITS LEHI.

For the first time in its history, Lehi had the honor, in 1891, of entertaining the President of the United States. In that year President Benjamin Harrison made a brief stop at the sugar factory, where the Silver Band and the citizens gave him a most cordial reception. The President stayed only long enough to hear a brief address of welcome from Thomas R. Cutler.

THE CENTRAL SCHOOL HOUSE.

George Webb, Andrew A. Peterson, and James P. Carter were the trustees of the Lehi school district, in 1892, when the Central School House was erected. Before deciding on the site, a bitter sectional fight arose, but finally the citizens from the northern part of the town carried their point, and a lot on the corner of Sixth North and Center Streets was purchased. Watkins was the architect of the structure, and $20,000.00 its initial cost. At first only six class rooms were finished, but the necessity for more was soon demonstrated with a resulting enlargement. The building has performed excellent service to the present time, and bids fair yet to have many years of usefulness.

NOTED EDUCATORS.

Among the many teachers who have labored to instruct the young people of Lehi in this building two stand out with especial distinctness—James M. Anderson and George N. Child. For many years Mr. Anderson had been the supervisor of the Lehi public schools and the teacher of the eighth grade. More than a few of the prominent men and women who have achieved fame in after life owe their introduction to Dame Learning to this man. With equal gratitude many of a still younger generation thank Mr. Child for their start on the never-ending path of education. Succeeding Mr. Anderson, Mr. Child was for many years the supervisor of the Lehi schools. In 1906 he resigned his teaching work and became cashier of the newly-organized Bank of Lehi. Since that time his ability in teaching has brought him back into educational work. For two terms he was Superintendent of Schools of Utah County, and is at present supervisor of the grammar grades in the Salt Lake City public schools. For one year after Mr. Child's resignation, the Lehi schools were in charge of Fred Worlton, who then resigned to take up medical work. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Andrew B. Anderson, an educator of experience and ability. He has had much to do with the phenomenal growth of the public school system and is largely responsible for its present high state of efficiency.

TWENTY-FIRST MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

To conform with recently enacted legislation, the twenty-first election for city officers was held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November—this year (1892) November 8—and the officers chosen were installed on the first of the year. For the first time also this election was carried out on national party lines. During the previous summer both the Republican and Democratic parties had effected organizations in Lehi and these now exerted themselves to the utmost to win the votes of the people. Street parades, torch light processions, drum corps, and political rallies became common affairs, and on every side the novel situation caused unlimited excitement.

The Democrats eventually carried the election: Abel John Evans, Mayor; James B. Gaddie, James M. Anderston, Otto Hudson, William R. Sharp, and Andrew Fjeld, Councilors; George N. Child, Recorder; Joseph A. Thomas, Marshal; and Prime Evans, Treasurer. The important appointments made by this council were William H. Winn, Jr., Assessor and Collector, and David J. Thurman, Attorney. The only change in the set of officers as elected was the resignation of Otto Hudson and the appointment of James Turner to succeed him.

For the first time, the city ordinances were printed in 1893, Mayor Evans acting as the Lehi member of a committee from all the cities of Utah County for the revision and printing of the municipal ordinances.

OLD FOLKS' COMMITTEE.

Having conceived the idea, while on a mission in the Southern States, William Southwick in 1892 originated a movement which has resulted in immense good to the aged of Lehi. His plan was to furnish some means of taking care of the old people and occasionally to tender them a celebration. Bishop Cutler approved the scheme most heartily, so Southwick called a committee to assist him; they were: Alphonzo M. Davis, Joseph Broadbent, Lott Russon, Sen., and George Glover. In December of that year the first entertainment was given in the Opera House, a program of old songs, recitations, and reminiscent speeches, which pleased the veterans immensely. Each summer and winter since, a similar affair has been tendered all the citizens over sixty years, and the happiness derived from this simple but effective means has been inestimable.

A CELEBRATION IN THE CANYON.

For many years it had been the custom of Lehi people to go for outings and excursions to nearby American Fork Canyon, but July 24, 1893, was the date of the first official celebration conducted there. Both the Lehi Silver Band and the choir spent Pioneer Day in the canyon, and with them went great numbers of citizens. An excellent program, together with picnic and sports, made up a successful celebration.

A CANNING FACTORY.

April of this year witnessed an offer from J. E. Keenan, of Ogden, to Lehi people to furnish the machinery for and operate a canning factory in the city if they would provide him a stipulated amount for operation. Thomas R. Cutler, Ira D. Wines, William E. Racker, William Clark, and T. F. Trane were among the number who accepted the proposition and financed the removal of the factory from Ogden to Lehi. One season was the extent of operation of the new enterprise, both because it was discovered that the machinery was antiquated and useless, and because disagreement arose between Keenan and the local stockholders concerning running expenses. A loss of $4,000.00 was the result of the venture to Lehi investors.

JAMES KIRKHAM & SONS--STOKER.

In 1893, two new business establishments were opened, one by the firm of James Kirkham & Sons, the other by John Stoker. The latter lasted only a few years and was abandoned. Kirkham & Sons erected a brick building on the corner of First East and Sixth North Streets, and filled it with a complete stock of merchandise. The venture proved profitable until 1904, when the store was closed. The building has since been used by the Standard Knitting Company and the Lehi Publishing Company.

TWENTY-SECOND MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

After a heated campaign, the Republicans succeeded in electing their entire ticket in the twenty-second election of city officers, on November 7, 1893: Oley Ellingson, Mayor; John Roberts, Jr., Thadeus

JAMES P. CARTER AND WIFE.

Powell, Benjamin S. Lott, Edward Evans, and Joel Myers, Councilors; Mosiah Evans, Recorder; Charles H. Karren, Marshal; George Evans, Justice; Oley Ellingson, Jr., Treasurer; and Geo. Webb, James P. Carter, and Elias A. Bushman, School Trustees. Their appointments included Stephen W. Ross, Attorney; James Evans, Building Inspector; and James Harwood, Food Inspector. The only change made during the incumbency of this set of officers was the substitution of Elisha H. Davis, Jr., for Stephen W. Ross, as Attorney, the latter having gone on a mission to England.

One of the first acts of this City Council was to authorize the erection of a new liberty pole in place of the one which had necessarily been removed by the previous administration. Nelson Gay Whipple built the new pole; it was ninety feet in length; and was put up on the jail lot.

Under orders from the city fathers, the first street sprinkling by the municipal government was commenced in September, 1895. Mathias Peterson was the teamster in charge.

THE INDUSTRIAL ARMY.

On May 9, 1894, there arrived in Lehi a detachment of the "Industrial Army" under "General" Carter. This was part of an organization of idle workmen from different states of the Union which aimed to converge at Washington and there secure certain legislation in their behalf. For a number of days the army camped on Dry Creek, at the State Road, and conversed with the citizens who came out of curiosity to inspect them. In addition they held an open-air meeting and paraded the streets with banners, some of which were inscribed, "No Pauper Labor" and "Give Us Free Silver." They terminated their visit by stealing an engine at Lehi Junction and proceeding to Provo, where the militia derailed the locomotive and thus checked their progress. Carter and sixteen of his followers ended in jail, while the rest were shipped to Colorado.

TWENTY-THIRD MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

Neither party was wholly successful in the election held November 5, 1895, which resulted in the selection of John Roberts, Jr., Mayor; Oley Ellingson, Andrew A. Peterson, Richard Bradshaw, and John S. Willes, Councilors; John E. Ross, Recorder; Joseph A. Thomas, Marshal; and James Harwood, Treasurer. Of this number Peterson, Willes, and Thomas were Democrats; the rest were Republicans. Thomas John of Provo, Attorney; Dr. C. L. Seabright, Quarantine Physician; and the mayor, the quarantine physician, and Hyrum L. Baker, a Board of Health, were some of the appointments made by the twenty-third coterie of city officers. The only change occurring in the personnel of the administration was the resignation of Thomas John and the appointment of Stephen W. Ross as Attorney when the latter returned from England.

The City Council now made an effort to erect a new city hall. First it sold the lot in the northern part of town over which there had been so much dispute previously, when the building of a jail was contemplated, and endeavored to buy all the property near the newly-erected jail. That is as far as the project advanced, however.

LEHI CELEBRATES STATEHOOD.

When, on January 4, 1896, it was learned that Utah had reached her long sought goal of Statehood, Lehi celebrated in fitting style the auspicious event. The firing of guns, ringing of bells, and blowing of whistles characterized the first part of the celebration, while an enthusiastic public assembly expressed congratulations over the induction of the forty-fifth State into the Union.

TWENTY-FOURTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The chief issue in the twenty-fourth civic election was prohibition, the Democrats declaring for the complete abolition of the liquor traffic, while the Republicans proposed high license and strict regulation as the proper solution of the problem. At the polls, on November 3, the Democrats elected their whole ticket with one exception: John S. Willes, Mayor; Andrew A. Peterson, James Alfred, Samuel Taylor, George H. Smith, and George Glover, Councilors; Edward Southwick, Recorder; Joseph A. Thomas, Marshal; and Thomas F. Trane, Treasurer. Samuel Taylor was the only Republican member of this administration. The principal appointments were David J. Thurman, Attorney; and Dr. C. L. Seabright, Quarantine Physician.

Some changes occurred during the two years this set of officers held their positions. Dr. R. E. Steele succeeded Dr. C. L. Seabright as Quarantine Physician; George Zimmerman accepted George Glover's place as Councilor because of the absence of the latter on a mission; and Prime Evans became Attorney when David J. Thurman resigned.

Early in 1899, the City Council sold the Kelly lot, which, although bought for a public park, had never been used as such, and utilized the proceeds of the sale in improving the city cemetery.

ELECTRICITY REACHES LEHI.

In the spring of 1899, the Lehi City Council entered into negotiations with Christian Garff concerning the proposed erection of a power plant at the mouth of American Fork Canyon, which could be utilized for furnishing power to Lehi, American Fork, and Pleasant Grove. The enterprise was possible providing the three cities would subscribe for a portion of the stock. Then began a series of meetings between the promoters and city officials which finally culminated in the organization, on August 2, of the Utah County Light and Power Company. Mayor Willes and Councilor Samuel Taylor were Lehi's representatives in this transaction. Lehi became the owner of $6,000.00 worth of stock, which was paid for by means of a special bond election in September. For the right of way on the city streets, the power company furnished electric lights at all the principal corners, and when the electricity finally reached Lehi early the next spring, the electric streets presented an extremely pleasing appearance.

SPANISH WAR HEROES.

August 19 saw the city arrayed in holiday attire to welcome home three Lehi volunteers who had served in the Utah Battery in the Philippines—Richard L. Bush, Philip Dallimore, and Abner Harris. These men had volunteered in April, 1898, were mustered into service at Fort Douglas on May 9, left Salt Lake City for San Francisco on May 20, and arrived in Manila, July 17. With the Utah volunteers they performed valiant and able service against the Spaniards in Manila and the surrounding country. Serving side by side with regular soldiers, the Utah Batteries acquitted themselves with such bravery and distinction that their reputation spread throughout the whole country. Of them it is said, "In an army where all were heroes the men of Utah made for themselves a conspicuous name. They earned it, for they never retreated, never lost a battle or a flag, never started for the foe that they did not scatter it as the wind scatters the chaff from the threshing floor." Serving with distinction until the late summer of 1899, the Utah volunteers reached San Francisco and were mustered out of service on August 16. After their reception in Salt Lake City three days later, Lehi gave her returning sons a welcome that has never been paralleled in her annals. A City Council appropriation, contributions by the citizens, and the most intense enthusiasm helped to furnish a fitting tribute to the returning heroes.

All three Lehi volunteers had made enviable names for themselves in the Utah contingent, and Richard L. Bush had been promoted to the rank of corporal for distinguished services.

Besides the three who had served in the Philippines with the Utah Batteries, Lehi had other sons who had volunteered for and had seen service in the war with Spain. Upon three different occasions Frederick Racker enlisted as a volunteer. The first time, he had expected to go to Cuba, but his regiment had only been used for guard duty. Upon the second enlistment, he served in the Philippines with the Twenty-fourth Infantry until compelled by sickness to return home. His last enlistment was in the regular army with the Twenty-ninth Infantry at Fort Douglas.

Another son of Lehi had served in the Wyoming Light Artillery—John Darling. Enlisting in 1898, Darling did not reach Lehi until several years after the mustering out of the others.

Azer R. Briggs and William C. Herron were two others who entered the army to fight their country's battles. Sworn in at Fort Douglas, July 23, 1899, they reached Manila, October 11, and immediately were assigned to General Lawton's division. With this leader they participated in sixteen months of active service, principally against the rebel Filipino general, Aguinaldo. Ofttimes they suffered extreme hardships, and on one occasion both were compelled to remain a number of days in the hospital. Sailing from Manila in February, 1901, they were mustered out of service in San Francisco, April 17, and reached Lehi three days later.

TWENTY-FIFTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The verdict of the voters on November 7, 1899, was that the previous Democratic administration of prohibition had not been successful, so they showed their disapproval of that party by electing the Republican ticket on a platform which declared for the former policy of high license and strict regulation.

That ticket was as follows: Mosiah Evans, Mayor; Samuel Taylor, William Bone; Elias A. Bushman, George Austin, and Richard Bradshaw, Councilors; James E. Ross, Recorder; J. N. Butt, Marshal; and Stephen W. Ross, Justice. The principal appointments of the City Council were Prime Evans, Attorney; Dr. R. E. Steele, Quarantine Physician; and Hyrum Timothy, Policeman.

In the following November, Mayor Evans was elected to the State Legislature, so he resigned his position as chief executive of Lehi. George Austin was appointed to succeed him, while Joseph S. Broadbent took the vacant place thus created in the City Council. Still other changes occurred in this administration—the appointment of John Y. Smith as Attorney because of the death of Prime Evans, July 8, 1901, and the selection of Joel Mears as Councilor in place of Richard Bradshaw, who had moved away.

MOSIAH EVANS,
Sixteenth Mayor of Lehi.
(1899-1900, 1902-1903)

It was the twenty-fifth City Council which took the initial steps to provide the city with a fire department. It purchased a number of ropes, buckets, and ladders as equipment, sent a committee to Payson and Eureka to study the fire departments existing there, and by ordinance created a fire department in Lehi. Later a small engine was purchased.

THE CITY PARK.

The City Council purchased from John Beck, in July, 1900, a lot near the Denver and Rio Grande station to use as a city park. Already the property was admirably adapted for the purpose, a thick growth of young trees covering part of it. Immediately the council began the task of improving the ground, and in this work the citizens were requested to share. Public holidays were declared and men and boys gave their work free while the women prepared lunch for them. In this way a fence was built around the grounds, a baseball diamond laid out, a grand stand constructed, and a floor laid for dancing. By July 24 the park was in such shape that the first celebration could be held there. The construction of the pavilion was a later undertaking, in charge of R. John Whipple. Both the park and the pavilion have performed yeoman service since. Most of the dances have been held in the pavilion, while the baseball diamond has witnessed many interesting exhibitions of the great national game. The park has also served for reunions, encampments, and athletic carnivals.

EMIGRATION.

Lehi had in the past been very seriously involved with the problem of immigration, but about this time arose a different kind of problem—that of emigration. Large numbers of Lehi people now left their old homes and moved to other parts of the West, most of them going to Canada. It was not dissatisfaction which impelled them to go, but rather the belief that greater opportunities existed in newer countries. Several towns in the province of Alberta owe a large part of their growth and population to this exodus from Lehi—notably Magrath and Raymond.

But Canada was not the only country in which Lehi people found a new home. Mexico, especially the State of Sonora, claimed many of these new pioneers. Idaho also received a great number. In addition, various towns in Utah obtained an influx of population from this move.

Thus with the sugar business and this exodus, Lehi can well claim to have children scattered over the entire West.

LEHI MERCANTILE COMPANY.

In 1901 a number of Lehi business men, together with investors from southern Utah, bought out the mercantile business of Louis Garff, and established the Lehi Mercantile Company in the Garff Building. Abel John Evans and James H. Gardner were the principal promoters of the new concern, and John L. Snow was the first manager. The company was able at first to enjoy a lucrative business, but later years saw it unprofitable. The store closed its doors in 1907.

TWENTY-SIXTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The result of the election of November 5, 1901, was the success of the Republican ticket, with two exceptions. The Democrats had combined with the Socialists and won the Recorder and Marshal, of whom the latter was a Socialist. The new officers were: George Austin, Mayor; James H. Gardner, James Harwood, Joel Mears, William Bone, Jr., and Samuel Taylor, Councilors; Sarah T. Evans, Recorder; Henry East, Marshal; John T. Roberts, Treasurer; and Stephen W. Ross, Justice. The council appointed John Y. Smith, Attorney; Dr. R. E. Steele, Quarantine Physician; and M. W. Ingalls, Chief of Fire Department.

Only two changes were made in the twenty-sixth administration. Having been elected to the State Legislature, Mayor Austin resigned and Mosiah Evans was chosen in his place. Later John T. Winn became Recorder when Mrs. Evans resigned.

The chief efforts of this administration were directed to improving the efficiency of the newly created fire department. Accordingly a building was erected on Main Street, adjoining the City Hall, in which to keep the engine, hose, and other equipment. The council also placed two water cisterns on Main Street, one near the City Hall and one on First West, to be used in fighting fire. The final act was the acceptance of approximately fifty volunteer firemen. The department has on numerous occasions been extremely useful in saving the threatened property of the citizens.

GEORGE AUSTIN,

Seventeenth Mayor of Lehi (1900-190-)

COTTER'S GROCERY.

In 1902, J. E. Cotter purchased the stock of Robinson's "Corner Grocery," and with additions opened a grocery store for business on Main Street. In 1910 he built a brick store on Main and Center Streets, and moved his goods there. His business has been a profitable one since.

CHAPTER XIX.

Modern Lehi.

THE twentieth century dawned upon a thriving, prosperous city which had grown from the seeds planted on Dry Creek five decades previously. Fifty years had worked marvelous changes. The old Lehi had known only hardship and suffering, the new rejoiced in peace and comfort; the old was oft confronted with starvation, the new lived in peace and even luxury; the old knew what it meant to be threatened with danger from savage men and savage beasts, the new experienced only safety and security; the old endured all manner of makeshifts and inconveniences in its daily life, the new utilized the manifold appliances and inventions of a highly developed modern science. Yet the old was not surpassed by the new in its patriotism and love for its home.

The growth of Lehi from the beginning of the century to the present has been of a kind with its previous advancement—steady, consistent, unceasing. Nothing has marred its development; much has aided it. Today, also, this progress is in evidence, and is certain to continue in the future.

THE PUMPING STATION.

Two successive seasons of drought, in 1900 and 1901, in Salt Lake County, led the farmers there to investigate new methods for securing additional water for irrigation to prevent the increasing diminution in crops and the corresponding drop in land values. The Jordan River had been the source of water supply; but now it was furnishing only one-fourth enough water. In a previous season of drought, Bishop Archibald Gardner, of West Jordan, had suggested the advisability of pumping water into the river and thus increasing the supply. His son, James H. Gardner, now took this idea up with Angus M. Cannon, president of one of the Salt Lake County canals, who in turn presented it to the Board of Canal Presidents, the body which regulated irrigation affairs in the county. After prolonged discussion and consideration, the scheme was adopted, and bids were opened for the installation of the pumps at the head of the Jordan on Utah Lake, four miles west of Lehi. James H. Gardner and M. W. Ingalls, of Lehi, secured this contract.

Building operations began June 21, 1902, and in the ensuing two months four pumps were installed. They were 48-inch Byron Jackson centrifugal pumps, capable of delivering 400 cubic feet of water per second, or approximately 3,000 gallons. They were driven by four 100-horse-power motors.

On August 19, two of the pumps were put into operation and immediately the flow of the river increased from 40 to 200 second feet of water. Although the additional supply from the pumps came so late in the season that it was not available for crops, yet the project had been proven a success and the farmers looked with hope to the next season. They were not disappointed. The summer of 1903 saw the river, by aid of the pumps, able to supply Salt Lake County farms with all the water needed. The pumping scheme was so successful that much new land was brought under cultivation and the necessity for more pumps created.

In 1905, another pump was installed, and in 1907, two more. All were of the same size as the first four.

LARGEST MOTOR AND PUMP AT JORDAN PUMPING STATION.

Finally, in 1911, the eighth and last pump was placed in operation. This was a 60-inch centrifugal pump, driven by a 250-horse-power motor and capable of delivering 1,600 gallons per second.

The entire plant now has a capacity of 700,000,000 gallons of water every twenty-four hours. It is believed to be the largest pumping plant in the world. As an investment, the station has proved to be invaluable. The good to the farmers which has directly resulted from its establishment cannot be estimated.*

TWENTY-SEVENTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The officers chosen November 3, 1903, to have charge of the affairs of the city for the ensuing two years were all Republicans except the Justice, who was a Democrat: Mayor, John Roberts, Jr.; William Bone, Councilor for four year term; Thomas Webb, George L. Comer, George Beck, and Edward Karren, Councilors for two year term; John T. Winn, Recorder; T. J. Wadsworth, Treasurer; J. Newburn Butt, Marshal; and Eli Kendall, Justice. The new council appointed James Brown, Road Supervisor; Dr. R. E. Steele, Quarantine Physician, and George Hammer, Fire Chief. Later John Y. Smith received the appointment as Attorney, but after his resignation he was succeeded by Stephen W. Ross.

The cities of Utah County now undertook a second revision and printing of the city ordinances. Councilor William Bone, Jr., was the representative of Lehi in this work: $500.00 was appropriated to defray the expenses incurred.

This City Council also endeavored to effect an exchange with the School Board, giving the jail lot for the old Biesinger lot. The deal was not consummated, however.

RACKER MERCANTILE COMPANY

Upon his return from a mission to Denmark, William E. Racker entered into negotiations with the People's Co-operative Institution for the purchase of their branch store on Main Street, which was now a commodious, modern structure. Finally the deal was consummated and the Racker Mercantile Company opened its doors for business, in 1905. The enterprise has prospered and at different times has been enlarged until today it is a flourishing business, handling all kinds of merchandise.

PRIMARY SCHOOL HOUSE.

This same year the School Board, urged by the overcrowded condition of the school houses, especially in the lower grades, began the construction of a new building on the corner of Center Street and Second North. It was for the use of the beginning classes and was therefore called the Primary Building. Erected at a cost of $30,000.00, and containing eight rooms, with all the modern conveniences, it is a credit both to the progressiveness of the city and the standard of its education.

TWENTY-EIGHTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The Republican party was again successful in carrying the city election on November 7, 1905: Thomas Webb, Mayor; Councilors (hold over), William Bone, Jr. (four year term), Samuel I. Goodwin (two year term), John D. Woodhouse, Henry Lewis, and Parley Austin; Marshal, George Evans; Recorder, John T. Winn; Treasurer, T. J. Wadsworth; and Justice, Samuel Taylor. Appointments were: Stephen W. Ross, Attorney; George A. Wall, Street Supervisor; George Hammer, Fire Chief; and John D. Woodhouse, Policeman—the last named resigning his office as Councilor to accept the position. Mathias Peterson succeeded him.

Ill fortune seemed to pursue the office of marshal during this administration, causing many changes. Marshal George Evans died, February 26, 1906, and John D. Woodhouse took up his duties. After a year's service, Woodhouse resigned and Robert Taylor was chosen to fill the place. While hunting rabbits, July 19, 1907, near Lehi, Marshal Taylor was killed by the accidental discharge of his gun, and all Lehi mourned his death. Edmund Fowler was the fourth incumbent of the office during the administration.

As an experiment, the City Council, in connection with the Lehi Irrigation Company, drove a three-inch well, during the summer of 1906, on Third East between Second and Third North Streets. The well reached a depth of 569 feet and discharged about 75 gallons of water per minute. It was used in sprinkling the streets.

BUSINESS GROWTH.

There began now in Lehi a definite era of business growth. Not only did the established business houses experience prosperous times, but many new concerns were founded and started likewise upon a successful career. Among these can be mentioned the Bank of Lehi, the Mount Pickle factory, the Lehi Roller Mills, and the Standard Knitting Company.

The Bank of Lehi was first established in the Ross Building on Main Street, in 1906, as a branch of the Bank of American Fork. Only one Lehi man, James H. Gardner, was on the board of directors. George N. Child was the first cashier. Lehi soon demonstrated its ability to support two banks, for the new institution was unusually successful. In 1912, a reorganization of the bank occurred. It became a state bank under the name of the State Bank of Lehi, and the capitalization was set as $25,000.00. Lehi stockholders now secured the majority of stock and the control of the board of directors. Edward Southwick, James H. Gardner, Morgan Evans, Dr. H. G. Holbrook, William E. Racker, and W. S. Evans were among the most active in effecting this change.

The factory of the Mount Pickle Company was established as a result of a thorough canvass among the farmers of Lehi in which the latter pledged themselves to raise sufficient cucumbers to justify the erection of a salting plant. For a short time each season, cucumbers are received and taken through the preliminary stages of pickling. Much benefit has accrued to Lehi people as a result of the erection of the factory.

Because the farmers of Lehi had been compelled to take their grain elsewhere since the cessation of the Mulliner mill, the need of a roller mill in the city became strongly evident. Various efforts had been made to promote new projects but without success. Finally, in 1905, a number of business men formed the Lehi Roller Mill Company and erected a thoroughly equipped, modern mill on the road to the sugar factory, a short distance east of the city. It is electrically operated. Among its first officers were John Y. Smith, Samuel I. Goodwin, Thomas Webb, James H. Gardner, and Abel John Evans. In 1910, the company sold its holdings to George G. Robinson. The mill has been operated since under his management.

which money had been sent outside. In this endeavor a full equipment of knitting machinery was installed in the Kirkham building on First East Street and a full line of knit goods produced. James M. Kirkham was the first manager.

COMMERCIAL CLUB.

In the promotion of these enterprises much credit was due to a club which had been formed some years before—the Commercial Club. It was organized in 1905 for the purpose of creating a medium whereby the business interests of Lehi could be forwarded, new industries fostered, and the products of the city well advertised. Incidentally it furnished social diversion. George Austin was the first president of the society. At first the club rooms were in the Utah Banking Building on State Street, but in 1911 they were transferred to the Ross Building on Main Street. The club has effected much good in the city's commercial life and has been a substantial aid to its general progress.

THE LEHI HIGH SCHOOL.

Although a ninth grade course had been given to fifteen students by G. N. Child, in 1902, and a continuation of their work had followed the next year, yet it was not until 1906 that this higher educational work came to be called a high school. James M. Anderson had taught these advance grades after the first year, but in 1906 he moved to Salt Lake City and W. Karl Hopkins, a graduate of the University of Utah, was engaged as principal of the Lehi High School. In 1908, a class was graduated from three years' work and the following year the first fourth year class received diplomas of graduation. Classes have been graduated every year since. In 1910, the High School came under the administration of the Alpine School District, whose board purchased the Central School House and used it exclusively for high school work. Its growth since has been phenomenally rapid. In 1913, the High School consisted of 151 students and seven teachers.

The High School students have been an important factor in the social life of the city, and are responsible for interesting and beneficial athletic diversion during the winter and spring months. The people of Lehi are proud of their High School and accord it their earnest support.

TWENTY-NINTH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

With the exception of one Democratic councilor, the Republicans had a clean sweep in the twenty-ninth election of city officers, observed November 7, 1907: Thomas Webb, Mayor; Councilors, (hold over), Samuel I. Goodwin, (four year term), Joseph W. Goates, Democrat, (two year term), Jonas Holdsworth, Le Roy Lott, and Henry Lewis; Recorder, George A. Goates; Treasurer, John T. Winn; Marshal, J. Newburn Butt; and Justice, Samuel Taylor. The appointive offices were distributed as follows: George Webb, Road Supervisor; George Hammer, Fire Chief; Abel John Evans, Attorney; Dr. Walter T. Hasler, Quarantine Physician, and Charles C. Trane, Policeman. The only change occurring in this administration was the resignation of Marshal Butt and the appointment of Henry East in his place.

PIONEER MONUMENT.

The fort wall had gradually fallen or been torn down until, in 1905, only one vestige of it remained on the south-west corner of the Primary School lot. When it became necessary to destroy this, a little sentiment was aroused over the passing of such a land mark without suitable commemoration. Nothing came of it, however, until 1908, when two men who had become interested in the matter, through their connection with the School Board, W. S. Evans and Andrew Fjeld, called a mass meeting of the citizens. The upshot of this and a subsequent assembly was the appointment of the Lehi Pioneer Committee, consisting of W. S. Evans, Andrew Fjeld, Martin B. Bushman, George N. Child, Hamilton Gardner, and A. B. Anderson.

The committee now offered a suitable prize for the best design for a monument; it was won by the Elias Morris Company, of Salt Lake. The memorial was erected in November, 1908; the base of Utah granite and the shaft of Vermont granite. It is 16 feet in height. On the sides of the base are a plan of the old fort, the raised inscriptions—"Fort Wall" and "Lehi Pioneers," and the following items of history—"Lehi settled, 1850; organized as a ward, 1851, David Evans, first bishop; incorporated as a city, February 5, 1852, Silas P. Barnes, first mayor. Erected 1908."

Thanksgiving Day, November 26, was the date of the unveiling of the monument. A holiday had been declared and invitations sent out to many of the pioneers of the city. Many of these, indeed, attended the meeting in the Tabernacle and the later exercises at the monument. The principal features of the program were an oration by David Evans, Jr., and the unveiling of the monument by Mrs. Azubia D. Cox Hardwick, the first child born in Lehi; she was assisted by H. M. Royle, the first boy born on Dry Creek.

The monument stands in a conspicuous place on the school lot on the north line of the fort, just 26 rods from the north-east corner. It is a fitting tribute to the work of the hardy pioneers who founded and built the city.

CITY WATER WORKS.

The question of an adequate water supply had long been a vexing one to the citizens of Lehi. Depending upon artesian and surface wells, they had experienced much dissatisfaction and not a little danger. When the movement for a city water system began, therefore, they were heartily in favor of it. The first project was to unite with American Fork and secure a supply of water from Grove Springs, near Alpine. On investigation, however, it was found that this water was neither of suitable quality nor of sufficient quantity to supply the two cities.

The City of Alpine now proposed another scheme —it should unite with Lehi in the installation of a system from School House Springs. A committee from the Commercial Club, consisting of James H. Gardner, Andrew Fjeld, and Abel John Evans, met with the City Council and urged them to investigate this plan. On June 9, 1908, the City Council and the Commercial Club committee made a trip to Alpine and after investigating the springs, held a meeting with the Alpine City Council and offered them $8,000.00 for five-sixths of the stream, the offer to be subject to the citizens of Lehi.

In July, a special meeting of the tax payers was held to discuss this proposed plan. The result was the sanctioning of the action of the council and the authorization of a water system. Furthermore, in a special bond election, on September 21, the people, by a decisive majority, authorized the issuing of $26,500.00 in water bonds to install the system. The last step in preparation for actual work came with the agreement with the City of Alpine and the Alpine Irrigation Company whereby Lehi was to secure five-sixths of the water from School House Springs for $8,000.00, and in addition Lehi was to pipe the entire stream to Moyle's Hill where the division would be made. The council now hired Richard R. Lyman to work out the details of the system and direct the installation.

The summer of 1909 saw the work on the system in full blast. Under the supervision of W. S. Evans, drain pipes were placed in all the outlets at School House Springs, and by a system of deep cross-cutting trenches, the water was brought into one channel. A weir for the division of the water was already being built at Moyle's Hill. From here it was conducted by pipe line across the bench to a settling tank just north of Lehi. This has a capacity of 320,000 gallons and is built of concrete. Other gangs of men put in a system of conduits along the city streets, and before many months had elapsed the water was in the homes of the citizens.

The water works has been a boon to the people of Lehi. It is inexpensive, sanitary, and plentiful, and gives a distinct value to the city's claim as a desirable residence town.

LEGISLATION BY THE CITY COUNCIL.

A prohibition wave now struck Utah and found echo in the action of various cities in Utah County.

As a preliminary step, the city councils of Lehi, American Fork, and Pleasant Grove decided to allow the licenses of liquor dealers to expire by February 1, 1910. Before this agreement was put in effect, the councils of all cities in the county agreed, in a meeting held in Provo in July, 1909, to adopt common legislation which would terminate the saloons by the first of the following year. After a protracted session, the Lehi City Council adopted this ordinance on September 14.

The exchange of lots with the School Board, which the City Council had tried to make several years previously, was completed in 1909. Through it the city came into possession of the lot on Center and First

North and the School Board became the new owners of the jail lot. The old jail was torn down at once and a larger and better one erected on the new city property.

A second special bond election, held July 26, authorized the city to bond for $21,000.00, of which $8,000.00 was to be spent on the water works and the remainder for funding a floating indebtedness.

The last official act of the council was the sale of the 12,000 shares of Utah County Light and Power stock to meet their later obligations. At various times the city had increased its holdings in this company until it totalled the number mentioned, but now it was deemed advisable to apply their value in helping the installation of the water works.

THIRTIETH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The thirtieth election of city officers was the most spirited the people had witnessed for some years. The prohibition question was one cause, the Democrats declaring explicitly for abolition of the saloons and accusing the Republicans of evading the question. Another reason was the internal trouble in the Republican ranks. There had been a bitter fight for the nomination for mayor, and this had the effect of splitting the party on election day, November 2, 1909. The result was a complete Democratic victory, with the exception of one councilor and the recorder: Mayor, Edward Southwick; Councilors, (hold over), Joseph W. Goates, (four year term), William F. Gurney, (two year term), George G. Webb, R. John Whipple, and James Gough (Republican); Recorder, George A. Goates; Treasurer, John Stoker; and Justice, Eli Kendall.

The appointments made by the council included Henry East, Marshal—(The last Legislature had made the marshal an appointive instead of an elective office); Abel John Evans, Attorney; George Schow, Road Supervisor; Dr. Walter T. Hasler, Quarantine Physician, and William J. Gurney, Night Police. Later the position of Superintendent of Water Works was created and George A. Goates designated as the first incumbent. Changes in this administration were few—the resignation of Police-man Gurney and the appointment of George Wing, and the resignation of Treasurer Stoker, who was succeeded by Ephraim J. Child.

Among the notable acts of this City Council was the passing of an ordinance which compelled all drug stores, soda fountains, and candy stores to close their places of business on Sunday. As public sentiment seemed to view such an action as entirely too strict, it was later modified.

The last Legislature had extended the bonding limit of cities, so at a third special election, held April 11, 1911, the city increased its bonded indebtedness to $25,000.00.

PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Near the close of 1910, the City Council established a public library and reading room in the Senate Building on Main Street. Securing the books of the Mutual Improvement library, and adding to them some others contributed by interested citizens, the library was able to make available a valuable set of books to the public. A librarian is in charge of the reading room which is opened at convenient hours on all week days.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL BUILDING.

The summer of 1910 witnessed the erection of the latest of Lehi's excellent system of public school buildings—the Grammar School building. It was built on the jail lot secured from the city one year before at a cost of $30,000.00. Ohran & Ejeld were the contractors in charge of the construction. The building is of white, pressed brick and contains eight rooms. A modern heating plant with which to heat both this building and the adjoining Primary building was also erected.

HOME COMING WEEK.

Sufficient time had now elapsed that Lehi's sons and daughters had been scattered all over the Intermountain West, and they had been away long enough that a visit to the old home would be highly desirable. Many people had privately and unofficially spoken of a "Home Coming Week," but it remained for the City Council, on December 27, 1910, to take the initial action. This was the appointment of a committee to direct the affair, consisting of Mayor Edward Southwick, Councilor Joseph W. Goates, Bishop James H. Gardner, Bishop Andrew Fjeld, Dr. Horace G. Holbrook, and W. S. Evans, with James M. Kirkham, secretary. The committee met shortly afterward and organized their work thoroughly. Immediately a widespread publicity campaign was launched, letters being sent to every former citizen of Lehi of whom any trace could be found. The Home Coming week was set for June 5 to 11.

Several days before the actual program was to commence, visitors began making their appearance, and by Monday, June 5, the hospitality of the city was crowded to its limit. Former residents of the town, relatives and friends, came in numbers which exceeded even the most sanguine hopes of the committee. But all were made welcome, not only by personal greeting, but by the decorations of the streets, residences, and business houses of the city. Blue and white had been chosen as the official colors of the celebration, and they were used profusely.

A "Get-Acquainted" meeting on Monday afternoon

STATE STREET (Looking East).

inaugurated a most successful week of entertainment. Then followed every day some special feature intended to make the visit of the guests a pleasant one, and increase their regret that they had moved away from the city. Old-fashioned dances, evenings with friends, opportunities to discuss reminiscences and memories of the past, and a general renewal of old friendships characterized the Home Coming celebration. One meeting was attended by Governor William Spry, while President Joseph F. Smith, of the Latter-day Saints, was the guest at another. The whole program was carried through with unusual success.

The Home Coming week furnished an opportunity for many people to see again those old friends from whom they had long been separated and whose acquaintance they valued most highly. Sons and daughters of Lehi came to their home again from all parts of the West. Many of them had participated in the stirring times which accompanied Lehi's foundation, and now they had gone to other parts of the country, playing again the part of pioneers and path-finders. The visit of these old veterans was a distinct benefit to Lehi, both because it gave her an opportunity to honor those whose work had built her up, and because she could show that their efforts had not been in vain. Altogether the Home Coming was a supreme success.

AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT.

The summer of 1911 witnessed a new kind of agricultural work in full blast. This was the process of dry-farming. Since 1851, the farmers had irrigated their lands to grow cereals, but modern agricultural science had now brought a new method to light—the production of grain without irrigation. The land west of the Jordan River was found especially adaptable to this kind of farming, so what had once been nothing but a sage brush tract was now covered with arid wheat. The lands around the Point of the Mountain, and on the bench north and west of Lehi, which had long been unused, were now also made to produce bounteous crops of golden grain.

But development had not stopped here. Both the bench land on the north and the land west of the Jordan was now brought under canals by the Provo Reservoir Company, and the Utah Lake Irrigation Company, respectively, making it possible to irrigate most of it. Thus the pioneer spirit of old, which "made the desert blossom as the rose," was continued in modern times.

THIRTY-FIRST MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The thirty-first election for city officers, which was held on November 7, 1911, returned the Republicans to office, the hold-over councilor being the only Democratic member: Mayor, William E. Racker; Councilors (hold-over), William F. Gurney, (four-year term) W. Karl Hopkins, (two year term) Thomas Webb, Parley Austin and George G. Robinson; Recorder, James F. Fyffe; Treasurer, Thomas F. Kirkham; Justice, George Webb. The appointments made by the council included William Asher, Attorney; Geo. Wing, Marshal; Dr. Horace G. Holbrook, Quarantine Physician; John E. Jones, Night Policeman; G. L. Comer, Road Supervisor; and George Hammer, Fire Chief. Only a few changes occurred during the administration. John Evans succeeded George Wing as Marshal, John Zimmerman took Policeman Jones' place, and John Cooper filled the vacancy caused by George Hammer's resignation as Fire Chief.

WILLIAM E. RACKER,
Twentieth Mayor of Lehi,
1911-1913.

PAVING OF SIDEWALKS.

The most notable action of the thirty-first City Council was the preparation to pave the sidewalks of the city. Recognizing that Lehi must take such action in order to keep up with modern progress, the council divided the city into paving districts and solicited bids for the construction of cement walks on all the principal streets. The work promises to be well under way before the close of 1913.

INTER-URBAN RAILWAY.

At various times in the past, different promoters had secured rights of way through the city, dependent upon the immediate commencing of building operations, but none had as yet utilized them. In 1910, however, a number of Utah County men, including several from Lehi, organized a company to construct an electric railway from Payson to Salt Lake City. This company has gone through several changes of officers and capitalizations until today it is called the Salt Lake and Utah Railway. It is proposed to operate electric passenger trains over the line, as well as to handle freight. The road has been surveyed several times, most of the rights of way secured, and grading has already begun. The inter-urban will run on Third North Street, in Lehi, and will be the third railway to pass through the city, affording it excellent connections with the State capital and other cities.

CHAPTER XX.

Today and Tomorrow.

A SURVEY of her development since 1850 justifies Lehi in feeling pride for the past, satisfaction for the present, and hope for the future. Her record is an enviable one; not a single blotch mars its whole course. It speaks ever of progress, order, and justice, never of lawlessness, stagnation, and retrogression. Every step forward has been natural and logical, because it has resulted from the labor of men and women who knew how to build firmly and well. Growth has been an internal working out of ideals, and not a chance external cause. To this can be ascribed the steadiness and consistency of Lehi's advancement—a past of which her children may always be proud.

Nor need their attitude change when they contemplate the present. Lehi is a fair city to look upon; her people are a good people. Her fertile fields, thriving mercantile establishments, and teeming factories, bespeak the industry in which they are pleased to live. On every side can be seen the evidences of prosperity and happiness.

The farmer cultivates his rich land with skill and profit, bringing forth crops in an abundance that belies the possibility of hunger and want. His waving fields and broad acres are proof positive of his prosperous condition. The fruit trees, laden to the breaking point with luscious fruit, bring each year pleasure and health to the consumer and profit to the owner of the orchards. Nor do the sheep and cattle fail to tender their share to the wealth and happiness of Lehi's children.

The laborer need not long be idle here. Factories beck him on to turn the wheels of industry and create the necessities of life for men and women within a radius of many miles. And for their labor and raw materials, the people receive a liberal compensation to add to their security against an unknown future.

As a residence town Lehi gives place to none. Free from all the vices of the large cities, she offers the dweller within her borders safety from that which is undesirable, together with all the advantages of modern life. She combines strikingly all the security of the country with the desirability of the city. Her educational system compares favorably with any in the land. Pure mountain water gushes forth from her water system. Her climate is unsurpassed. Three railroads place her within easy reach of Salt Lake and other sister cities. Her people are desirable neighbors. Everything is suitable to make Lehi continue as one of the favorite residence towns of the West.

On all sides is opportunity for legitimate pleasure and diversion. The canyons nearby, and Utah Lake with its wide expanse of shimmering blue, invite the camper and tourist to rest, and the contemplation of Nature's wondrous beauties. The Saratoga Springs offer their healing waters for the benefit and enjoyment of the visitor. The theatres and places of amusement furnish proper and refined pleasure to those who wish thus to enjoy themselves. The citizens, too, whether in dance, party, or private association, afford a richness of friendship and sociability unsurpassed. So, then, Lehi can well feel satisfaction with her present condition.

But it must be the kind of satisfaction that seeks something better, not that kind which stagnates in self-sufficiency. The future is colored with a rosy outlook for her. It beckons her on to greater progress than ever. The duty of her sons and daughters is to retain and practice that patriotism for their city which characterized the every action of their fathers and mothers. Let her honor be their choicest possession, her welfare their most immediate desire. If so it be, then the future will yet bring forth a greater and better Lehi.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

ANDREW R. ANDERSON.

Andrew Rasmus Anderson was born near the city of Aalborg, Denmark, March 9, 1844. He was the only child of Jens and Ane C. Anderson, people of considerable means and influence.

The family became converts of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Andrew R. was baptized a member when sixteen years of age, and before six months had elapsed, he became a missionary of the gospel, preaching in his own land with great success. Through his efforts he organized a branch of the church in the city of Belun.

In the year 1862 the family emigrated to Utah. His father was buried in the North Sea, but he and his mother arrived in October of that year.

Mr. Anderson settled in Ephraim, Utah, where he was married to Mary Ann Pederson, January 1, 1863. Six children were born of this marriage. Later he married a second wife, Nelsina M. Anderson, by whom eight children were born.

While in Ephraim he was active in defending the homes and property of the people against the Indians. He took part in all the engagements and expeditions in the Black Hawk War in that section.

Mr. Anderson moved to Lehi in the year 1870, where he has since resided. He procured some of the choice lands of Utah valley, which he tilled with profit.

He at once became active in the civic development of the community. He served for a short time as marshal of Lehi and one term as mayor of the city. Through earnest effort he brought about the entry of the western half of section 16, which now forms a part of Eastern Lehi. He was a director on the Lehi City water board during the early years of its organization. He has been identified with many leading interests of the city. For years he was a director in the Lehi Bank and later the Utah Banking Company, also a director in the People's Co-operative Institution, which position he holds at the present time. He was one of the leading promoters in the erection of the Lehi Tabernacle which adorns our city.

Not only in civic, but in a religious way, has Mr. Anderson been active. From the beginning he was a devout believer in the faith of the Latter-day Saints. As a church worker he filled many positions with credit. From 1874 to 1877 he filled a mission to his native land. He was selected as counselor to Bishop David Evans, and later as counselor to Bishop T. R. Cutler, thus acting in the Bishopric more than 30 years. After the division of the wards, he served as a high councilor in the stake. He was chosen counselor to William Bromley, president of the High Priests' Quorum of the Alpine Stake. Since the death of President Bromley, Mr. Anderson has been chosen president of that quorum.

All who know Mr. Anderson know him as a man of his word. He has led a useful life, administering to the needy, helping the distressed, and giving counsel to his fellow-men. By his straightforward and honorable career he has drawn around him a host of friends, and has the entire confidence of all who know him.

MARY ANN PEDERSON ANDERSON.

Mary Ann Pederson Anderson was born at Vedum, Denmark, September 29, 1837. She is the third child of a family of nine children. She joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints November 9, 1855. The spirit of gathering soon found Mrs. Anderson a disciple, and she emigrated to Utah in 1862 with C. A. Madsen's ox team company. She was married New Year's day, 1862, to Andrew R. Anderson, at Ephrain, Sanpete County, Utah. In 1870 conditions made it possible for her husband to move to Lehi, the place of her death, September 23, 1912, at the age of 74 years, 11 months, and 24 days.

Mrs. Anderson was an active worker in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. She was an earnest laborer in the Primary Association from the time of its organization until the incorporation in the Lehi Ward of the Relief Society in 1882. At this date she was appointed to the position of treasurer of the Relief Society, acting in this capacity for the following eighteen years. From 1900 to 1903 she filled the position of counselor, and from 1903 to 1907 the position of president. She is the mother of six children, three boys and three girls.

NELSINA ANDERSON.

Nelsina Anderson was born in the city of Staun, Denmark, in the year 1854. She was the youngest but one of nine children. Her parents, Andres and Dorothy Anderson, were the admiration of the community in which they lived.

Nelsina was one of those who left a comfortable home for the gospel's sake. In company with her parents, three sisters, and the youngest brother, she emigrated to Utah in the year 1868.

She is one of those who shared in the sad experiences connected with such emigrations. A sister was buried in the ocean, a father and a sister on the way, and mother and a brother died a few days after reaching Utah. Thus only she and her one sister remained. Fortunately they were among friends. They were offered inducements to return to their native land by a well-to-do relative, but the girls were already firmly planted in Utah, and here they remained.

Nelsina Anderson came to Lehi in the year 1870, where she was married to Andrew R. Anderson, a well-known resident of Lehi. She has reared a family of children of whom she may justly be proud. All who have been her neighbors know full well that she has kept the commandment: "Love thy neighbor as thyself." For fifteen years she labored as a teacher in the Relief Society, and holds such a position at the present time.

Through her warm sympathy, kind consideration of others, and her willing devotion, she has left remembrances that will never die.

ANDREW BJRRING ANDERSON.

Andrew Bjrring Anderson is the son of Andrew R. Anderson and Mary Ann Pederson Anderson. He was born in Ephraim, Sanpete County, Utah, on the 14th day of September, 1866. When he was three years old, his parents moved to Lehi, the place of his home up to the present time, excepting the years spent in teaching at Vernal and Beaver.

Mr. Anderson's early life was occupied on the farm, which afforded a most excellent opportunity for attending school during the winter months. In the spring of 1884 he graduated from the public schools, and the following two winters attended the B. Y. Academy at Provo, graduating at the head of his class in 1886 from the preparatory normal course. The ambition of becoming a teacher, which had been created under the splendid instructions of Dr. Maeser, were for a period of six years not realized. It was during these years that he was employed by the Lehi Co-op. as clerk, serving two years in the Branch store and four years at the main building, in Lehi. During the summer of 1892, while acting as a grand juror in Provo, the influences of Dr. Maeser's early teachings moved him to make arrangements for attending school the following winter. During the commencement exercises of the spring of 1895, the B. Y. University conferred upon him the degree of Bachelor of Pedagogy (B. Pd.), also a diploma from the commercial department of the same institution. Two years later the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, as recognition of meritorious work in the Uintah Stake Academy, conferred upon him the degree of D. B. In the spring of 1912, he filed credits from the most noted summer schools of the University of Utah, the B. Y. University, and the Agricultural College with the State Board of Education, receiving from it a State High School Diploma. He served as teacher and principal from 1895 to 1901, in the Uintah Stake Academy, and from 1901 to 1907 as principal of the Beaver Branch of the B. Y. University, and from 1908 to the present writing, he has occupied the position of district principal of the Lehi schools.

Mr. Anderson has been a consistent Democrat all of his life.

During his early manhood, he received from his party recognition in being sent as a delegate to attend the National Democratic Convention, held in Chicago, at which time and place Grover Cleveland received the nomination for his second term as President of the United States.

He has been a persistent worker in the church to which he belongs. In his early youth, he was placed in the position of counselor to the president of the Y. M. M. I. A., and later became president. For three years, from 1898 to 1901, he was counselor to Bishop John N. Davis, of the Vernal Ward, and from 1901 to 1907, was presiding elder of the Academy Branch of the Beaver Ward. At this writing he holds, in the Alpine Stake, the position of alternate to the high council, member of the stake board of education, and superintendent of the religion classes.

Wherever he has lived, he has been a producer and a home-builder, a lover of the soil, and a producer of its products.

Hannah Evans and Andrew B. Anderson were married in the Manti Temple, September 12, 1888. To them have been born Vernon A., Leland D., Maesa L., and Mary M. Hannah Evans is the daughter of David Evans and Margaret Christina Holm Evans. She was born in Lehi, February 4, 1870.

JOHANAH J. J. ANDERSON.

Johanah Johnson Jacobs Anderson, the daughter of John and Anna Johnson, was born in 1792, in Tyrsfors, Soken, Norway. The family were farmers, so her early life was spent on the farm. Her education was limited to the amount prescribed by law, which was very little. She married Swen Jacobs, with whom she had two sons, Swen and John.

In 1830, the family emigrated to the New World, being among the first to leave Norway for America. Two years after their arrival, the husband died, leaving Mrs. Jacobs a widow, in the state of New York. A few years later she married Andrew Anderson, and together they moved to La Salle County, Illinois. While here they joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, through the instrumentality of Elder George P. Dykes and others. Mrs. Anderson and her two sons, Swen and John, were baptized August 12, 1842.

May 18, 1849, the family started on the perilous trip across the plains for Utah, with ox teams, arriving in Salt Lake City, October 31, 1849. On the Sweetwater they were overtaken by a raging snow storm, and lost a great number of their cattle, and but for the timely arrival of help from the valley, they would have been unable to continue the journey.

The next two and a half years were spent in Session Settlement, and in the spring of 1852 the family moved to Lehi.

Grandma Jacobs, as she was affectionately called, spent the remainder of her days in Lehi, administering cheer and comfort to the sick and bereaved. She was eminently successful as a midwife, and a great deal of her time was taken up with this work. She died at the home of her son, John, December 17, 1878, aged 86 years.

MONS ANDERSON.

Mons Anderson was born February 8, 1829, at Ringsager, Hedemarken, Norway. He emigrated to America in 1848, locating in Wisconsin. In 1852 he started for the gold fields of California, but while passing through Salt Lake City, he was converted to Mormonism through hearing Orson Pratt preach, and was baptized by Robert T. Burton, July 9, 1852. He remained in Salt Lake City, and married Christine Bensen July 3, 1854. Before leaving Salt Lake City, he was called to go and meet Johnston's army in Echo canyon.

He moved to Lehi in April, 1858. He filled a mission to Norway in 1870-1872, laboring as traveling elder and as president of the Christiania Conference. In 1882-1883, he filled another mission to Wisconsin and Minnesota.

He married Hanna Gulbrandson in October, 1875. He was the father of seven sons and two daughters. He was one of the first men in Lehi to raise flax, hemp, and broom corn, and to manufacture from these products rough linen, rope, and brooms. For many years he was president of the Scandinavians of Lehi. He also filled other ecclesiastical positions. Mr. Anderson took part in all the activities and withstood all the hardships of early Lehi, and was among the most ardent of pioneer town builders. He was a prominent and progressive citizen to the time of his death, September 18, 1908.

CHRISTINE BENSEN ANDERSON,

Christine Bensen Anderson, wife of Mons Anderson, was born June 11, 1826, at Aarnage, Island of Bornholm, Denmark. She accepted the gospel from the first missionaries sent to Denmark, and was baptized by Elder George P. Dykes, August 24, 1850. She was living in Copenhagen at the time of her conversion. She gave the elders financial aid, and took great pleasure in helping to teach the Danish language to Erastus Snow. Soon after her conversion, she was asked to accompany the elders to Bornholm her native island, to do missionary work. Her parents, Yeppe and Maren Bensen, gave them a home, and she helped to support the elders, and assisted them in their missionary work. She was the second convert from Bornholm to join the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

She left her native land for Utah, December 24, 1852, on the sailing vessel, "Forest Monarch," in Elder John Forsgren's company. They were ten weeks crossing the ocean, arriving in Salt Lake City, October 3, 1853. The overland journey was made by ox team, and Miss Bensen walked all the way, besides caring for an invalid, and cooking for eight people.

She was married to Mons Anderson, July 3, 1854. They endured all the hardships of that early day, making their home in Salt Lake City till the spring of 1858, when they moved to Lehi. Their first home here was a dug-out, and later two small adobe rooms. She engaged in pioneer industries, such as carding, spinning, and weaving. She was the mother of five sons and one daughter, and an active Relief Society worker for over twenty years. She endured the hardships of early days with cheerfulness and patience. Lehi was her home till the time of her death, December 28, 1909.

THOMAS ASHTON.

Thomas Ashton, the son of Joseph and Catherine Sedden Ashton, was born in the township of Parr, Lancashire, England, November 7, 1813. At the age of fifteen years he was apprenticed for six years to the trade of wheelwright, carriage builder, and ship-carpenter. At the expiration of his apprenticeship, he went to work on the Liverpool and London railway, which was being built at that time.

November 20, 1836, he married Mary Howard. He and his wife were the first citizens of St. Ellens to be baptized members of the Mormon Church. They were baptized by Samuel Cryer at St. Ellens, Lancashire, England.

They emigrated to America in 1841, and made their home at Skunk River, Iowa. The family were driven away by the mob and went to Nauvoo. He returned to Skunk River to sell his property, but the mob had possession, and compelled him to sign a deed to the property.

His wife died August 26, 1849, at Pottawattamie, Iowa. She was the mother of five children.

He was ordained a priest January, 1841, by Theodore Curtis; ordained a seventy at Nauvoo, 1844, ordained a high priest by Daniel S. Thomas, August 22, 1875, at Lehi, Utah, and received his endowments May 23, 1856, at Salt Lake City, Utah.

On September 25, 1849, he married Sarah E. Mills. She died September 3, 1850, leaving one child.

On February 17, 1851, he married Araminta Lawrence, at Council Bluffs, Pottawattamie, Iowa. They had eleven children.

Before his final move to Nauvoo, he went to work under the direction of the Prophet Joseph Smith on the Nauvoo Temple. He assisted to build the noted Mormon boat, the "Maid of Iowa." The family moved to Nauvoo after the death of the Prophet. He took part in all the events of the trying times until the final expulsion. He worked in the wagon shops where the wagons were made for the trip westward. He assisted in the last defense of Nauvoo against the mob, and helped to work the cannon that was made out of a steamboat shaft.

The family left Nauvoo at the final expulsion, and went to Winter Quarters, passing through the events that happened there until the breaking up of Winter Quarters. Not having means enough to come to Utah, they moved back across the Missouri River to Council Bluffs. Here they raised crops until the spring of 1851, when the family moved to Utah, traveling in the company of Captain Morris Phelps. The company arrived in Salt Lake City, September 27, 1851, and came to Lehi, arriving October 6, 1851.

He took a very active part in planning and making our first water ditches, and was one of our first water masters when there was no salary attached to the office. He was also very active in planning and building our first bridges across Jordan River, and other bridges, also our first meeting and school house. He was a member of the Lehi City Council from 1854 to 1866 inclusive, and was always prominent in adding his means to the outfits of our boys going on Indian raids. He died in Lehi, Utah, January 22, 1903, at the age of 89 years, 2 months, and 15 days.

ARAMINTA L. ASHTON.

Araminta Lawrence Ashton, the daughter of John and Rhoda Sanford Lawrence, was born in upper Canada, December 5, 1831.

With her parents she went to Missouri in 1838, and was there to share in the mob troubles and the expulsion of the Mormons in 1839, and they settled at Pittsfield, Pike County, Illinois, where they remained until the expulsion of the Saints from Nauvoo on account of their religion, in 1846.

She married Thomas Ashton, February 17, 1851, at Council Bluffs, and they emigrated to

ARAMINTA L. ASHTON.

She was the mother of eleven children, three of whom preceded her to the Great Beyond. She raised and cared for fourteen children, two of her husband's first wife's and one grand daughter.

She would take her family and glean wool from the bushes, wash, card, spin, and weave it into cloth to clothe her family. She also wove cloth and carpets for others. She burned grease wood, gathered the ashes, leached, and used them to make soap in the place of lye. She helped in the cricket and grasshopper war.

She was an active member of the Mormon Church, and held the office of teacher in the Relief society, also in the Sabbath School. She also labored in the Mutual Improvement Association.

Being of a charitable disposition, she was always ready to help the poor and nurse the sick.

She died in Lehi, Utah, June 10, 1891, at the age of 59 years, 6 months, and 5 days.

JOHN AUSTIN.

John Austin was a grandson of James Austin, who was born about 1748, in Bedfordshire, England. His wife, Mary, was born in 1752, in the same shire. James Austin was fairly well to do, being very industrious, and had a respectable family of eight children. One Sunday afternoon, on his way home from visiting a friend, he broke a blood vessel while crossing a stile, and died soon after. The family was now dependent on the mother, and the children, who were going to school, were kept out and set to work. The mother died in 1835, being 83 years of age.

Joseph Austin was the seventh child of James and Mary Austin, and was born May 17, 1791, in Studham, Bedfordshire, England, where he lived all his days, and where he died September 14, 1870. He married Ann Mills about the year 1814, and to them were born eight children..

John Austin was the third child of Joseph and Ann Mills Austin. He was born December 3, 1822, in Studham, Bedfordshire, England, where he spent his youth and early manhood. He married Emma Grace March 20, 1847; on her twentieth birthday. She was a daughter of Thomas Grace and Mary Jayce Grace, and was born in Whipsnade, Bedfordshire, England, March 20, 1827. Soon after their marriage, this couple moved to Kinsmouth, Hartfordshire, where they resided for about one year, when they returned to Studham. While in Kinsmouth, Mrs. Austin was converted to the Mormon faith and was baptized a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, January 5, 1848, by Elder Benjamin Johnson, and two years from that day Mr. Austin was immersed in the waters of baptism.

Soon after their conversion, this couple had a strong desire to emigrate to Utah to the body of the Church, as the principle of gathering was preached considerably throughout England at this time. It seemed to be a hopeless undertaking, however, as it was about all they could do to get the bare necessities of life for their ever-increasing family. Mrs. Austin, who was a woman of great faith and determination, was very anxious to do something to increase their scanty income, that her family might at some time be permitted to gather with the Saints in the valleys of Utah. One day in 1854 a man came to her door selling straw for braiding. He persuaded her to buy a number of bundles to sell to her neighbors, offering her about one cent per bundle for profit. Mrs. Austin was quite successful in this venture, and bought more bundles of straw, which she also sold at a profit. From this small beginning, in the course of time, a business was built up and a small store was conducted, which helped materially to swell the coffers of the family. By 1866 sufficient means had been saved to send two of the children to Zion, accordingly the two oldest, Harriet and George, were sent. Two years later the father decided to emigrate, as perhaps the opportunities for making money were more plentiful in Utah than in England. Two weeks before the vessel sailed on which John expected to travel, one of their neighbors who also expected to emigrate to Utah at this time offered to lend the money for the entire family to go. This man was Bartle Turner, the father of the Turner families of Lehi, and it is needless to say that the offer was thankfully accepted, the necessary preparations hurriedly made, and the family, which at this time consisted of father, mother, and nine children, was soon on its way to the West.

They crossed the ocean on the sailing vessel, "John Bright," and the plains in Captain Joseph S. Rawlins' mule train, which left Laramie City July 25th, and arrived in Salt Lake City August 20, 1868. They came at once to Lehi, where their son and daughter, who had preceded them, were living, and have since made this place their home.

Soon after his arrival in Lehi,

Mr. Austin took up farming and in connection with his sons was among the first to take up land on the bench north of Lehi on the Bull River Ditch. The father and sons have been eminently successful as tillers of the soil and when the sugar factory was located at Lehi, the Austin brothers were among the foremost to bring about the successful cultivation of the sugar beet. As a consequence, a number of the sons of John Austin at the present time are superintendents of agriculture at some of the factories of the Utah-Idaho Sugar Company, George being the general superintendent of agriculture over all of the Utah-Idaho Sugar Company factories.

After a well spent life of toil and devotion, having brought seventeen children into the world, twelve of whom grew up to manhood and womanhood. Mrs. Austin died, November 30, 1893. In May, 1894, Mr. Austin married Elizabeth Pead, who preceded him just a few days to the Great Beyond. He died February 13, 1907. John Austin was a true and faithful Latter-day Saint, full of devotion to duty and true to every trust. At the time of his death he presided over the high priests of Lehi, and was dearly beloved and respected by all. His family has been active in many lines in the history, not only of Lehi, but of the intermountain region. They are noted for thrift, industry, and business sagacity, and are filling many positions of trust and honor both in church and state.

WILLIAM BALL.

William Ball, son of George and Harriet Noyes Ball, was born at Andover Hans, England, January 22, 1833. He received a common school education, and at the early age of 16 years left his home in the country and cast his lot in the city of London. Here he remained until he became 21 years old, when he joined the L. D. S. faith, and in the year 1855 married his first wife, Sarah Ann Markwick. On October 1st of the same year he set sail for America, arriving three weeks later in New York. His wife joined him there in February, 1856.

Leaving New York in the spring of 1857, he and his wife set out for Council Bluffs, joined Israel Evans' hand cart company, and crossed the plains, walking a distance of thirteen hundred miles. They arrived in Salt Lake on the 12th day of September, 1857, where they remained a few days for rest, then journeyed on to Lehi. Here he followed the occupation of farming.

In the year 1858 he was called to take charge of the toll bridge over Jordan River, where he remained for a number of years. In 1862 he married his second wife, Caroline Simmons, who came in the same company across the plains. From this union came six sons and two daughters. In 1863 he was called on a mission to Omaha to help a company of Saints cross the plains with ox teams. In 1877 he filled a mission to England, spending nearly three more years of his time for the great cause of truth.

He labored as a block teacher for a period of 40 years, and was also connected with the Sunday School 30 years. He was beloved by all who knew him for his genial disposition, always looking on the bright side of life. He lived and died a faithful Latter-day Saint, being called to the Great Beyond April 10th, 1911.

His wives were certainly true to him, working hand in hand with him, suffering the trials of subduing a new land. They were faithful to the cause of truth. His wife Sarah Ann labored as a teacher in the Sunday School, and held the office of treasurer of the Relief Society for many years. Caroline was called as one of the first Sunday School teachers when it was reorganized in 1866. In 1878 the first Primary Association was organized in Lehi, and Caroline, with 13 others, was set apart to preside over this organization, which office she held for 13 years. Since she discontinued that work, she has labored as a teacher in the Relief Society.

SILAS P. BARNES.

Silas Parker Barnes was born in Deering, New Hampshire, March 7, 1805. His parents were natives of that state. His father having a large family to support, Silas, at the age of seventeen, decided to cope with life's battles alone; so bidding his family farewell, he made his way to Boston. With only a single dollar in his possession, he began what proved to be almost a fruitless search for work. Finally, at the great grain and coal wharves, he found a job shoveling coal, which he gratefully accepted. Being active, energetic, and willing, he succeeded in a few years, by untiring industry, in winning a partnership in the business and finally owned it himself.

With the advent of prosperity, Barnes decided to share his life, so on May 7, 1832, he married Miss Olive Chapman, then of Boston, but a native of Saco, Maine. From this union were born nine children, three daughters and six sons, of whom only three are now living: Ferdinand of Rhode Island, and Richard G. and Watson of California. The other children are Freeman, Sarah E. Carners, Marcellus, Pamela, Leander, and Harriet.

In 1851 Mr. Barnes settled up his business and with a number of others who, like himself, had embraced the doctrines taught by Joseph Smith, started west. Traveling first by railway to New York and then by canal boat and steam boat, they finally reached Council Bluffs, Iowa. After a stay of six weeks here in preparation for the arduous journey ahead of them, the company finally set out. The party consisted of sixty wagons, two hundred men, and almost that many women and children. The journey through the trackless prairies, among ever-present dangers from the untamed elements and wild savages, was a noteworthy one. After two and one-half months, the company reached Salt Lake City. Here the Barnes family remained a year, during which the father bought five acres of land and improved it and built a house and small barn. These preparations enabled the family to withstand with comparative comfort the severe winter which followed. Next spring Silas planted the five acres with peach pits, which later grew into a thriving orchard. The lot was situated near the present business center of Salt Lake City.

In the summer of 1852 the family again moved, this time to Dry Creek, where Barnes purchased a farm about three-quarters of a mile outside of the fort. He was quite successful in farming because of available irrigation water. After one year, the family was ordered to move into the fort because of threatened danger from the Indians. They had seen the redmen only once, when about three hundred of them camped a little distance from the farm, and stole some cattle belonging to the settlers.

In 1853 Silas P. Barnes was elected mayor of Lehi. He was the first incumbent of that office and filled it most successfully.

Becoming dissatisfied with conditions in general in Utah, Mr. Barnes decided to remove, so in April, 1854, he started with his family to California. After a three months' journey they reached the Golden State, and settled in Yolo County. Here Silas followed farming until his death, in April, 1888, Mrs. Barnes having passed to the Great Beyond April 5, 1885.

During his later years, Silas became an adherent of the Adventist faith, and having been from his boyhood an earnest student of the Bible, but few men were so conversant with its teachings as he. Of strong religious convictions, imbued with, to him, right principles, energetic, active, stern, though just in all his dealings with his fellows, he built up not only a large worldly fortune, but also made for himself a place in the hearts of the people of the community as a good man and earnest friend to the interests of the public. May the good and charitable deeds of "Daddy" Barnes, as he was familiarly called, ever be remembered.

Watson Barnes.

JOHN BONE.

John Bone was born September 2, 1839, at Caldecote, Bedfordshire, England. He joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the year 1854, and received the priesthood shortly after, in the Caldecote branch.

He left England in 1858, on the ship "Empire," traveling with the missionaries who came home that year, the year in which the army came to Utah. He stayed in New York and worked until the year following, when he went to Florence, Nebraska, and volunteered his services to drive a team for the Church across the plains. He arrived in Salt Lake City in the fall of 1859, and came to Lehi in the year 1860, where he resided until his death, January 16, 1893.

He joined the Sixty-eighth Quorum of Seventies December 2, 1862.

His occupation was that of farming. The first year sugar beets were raised in Lehi for the sugar factory, he took the prize for raising the most beets to the acre.

He was a good citizen, a faithful Latter-day Saint, a kind father, and an affectionate husband.

HANNAH S. BONE.

Hannah S. Bone, daughter of James and Hannah Pratt Slater, was born October 5, 1839, at Clifton, Bedfordshire, England. She joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints November 5, 1854.

She crossed the ocean on the ship "Underwriter," leaving Liverpool on the 1st of April, and landed in New York on the 1st of May. She came across the plains with the hand cart company under the direction of Captain Daniel Robinson, leaving Florence, Nebraska, on June 2, 1860, and arriving in Salt Lake City on August 27, the same year.

She came to Lehi two days later, residing here until the present time.

She was married August 28, 1860, to John Bone, son of William and Mary Wagstaff Bone.

They were blessed with eight children; seven are now living, and reside in the following places: John Bone of Lehi; James Bone, Garland, Utah; Mrs. Jane Mason, Lehi; George Bone, Magrath, Canada; Mrs. H. J. Stewart, Lehi; Mrs. Charles Edwards, Garland, Utah; and Eugene Bone, Lehi. Thirty-two grandchildren are living, and ten are dead, while twelve great grandchildren are living and three are dead.

Sister Bone has been a worker in the Primary and also the Relief Society of Lehi.

WILLIAM BONE, SR.

William Bone, Sr., son of Thomas Bone and Elizabeth Ollengos Bone, was born November 8, 1812, at Beeston, Bedfordshire, England. He left England for America in 1861, arriving at Salt Lake City in September of the same year, and moved to Lehi soon afterwards.

He was married to Mary Wagstaff, from which union were born seven children.

As a builder of Lehi, he was noted as one of its most liberal philanthropists; in all worthy causes his name was written near the head of the list.

He served Lehi as general watermaster for several years; also acted as a director of the People's Co-operative Institution for a term of years.

He was one of Lehi's foremost farmers, and above all true to himself and honest with all his fellows. He died October 2, 1902, at Lehi, Utah.

WILLIAM BONE, JR.

William Bone, Jr., was born November 6, 1841, in Upper Caldicote, Bedfordshire, England, his parents being William and Mary Wagstaff Bone.

In April, 1861, he sailed from Liverpool for America, on the sailing vessel "Underwriter," with his parents. They crossed the plains from the Missouri River with an ox team, arriving in Salt Lake City in September, 1861, and moving to Lehi soon after.

In 1863 he returned to the Missouri River with an ox-team for immigrants, bringing also on his journey a part of the famous Salt Lake Tabernacle organ.

In 1866-1867 he went to Sanpete and Sevier counties to help quell the Indian trouble, participating in what is known as the Black Hawk War.

In July, 1867, he married Fanny Wagstaff, from which union there were eleven children.

He served Lehi six years in the capacity of city councilor, being elected for the two-year, and later for the four-year term.

He was rated as a leading farmer, and served a number of years in the board of directors of the Lehi Irrigation company, acting as its president several terms, and holding this position at the time of his death.

He died November 19, 1912, at Lehi, Utah.

SAMUEL BRIGGS.

Samuel Briggs, son of William Briggs and Jane Hays Briggs, was born at South Clifton, Nottinghamshire, England, on the 20th day of June, 1826. As was the custom in that period, he received a parochial school education, working with his father on a farm until he was 13 years of age, when he hired out by the year to a farmer, at Olme, Nottinghamshire, working for a year, after which he went to work in the coal mines of that district. While living at Bolesover, five miles from Chesterfield, Derbyshire, he heard the principles of the gospel as taught by the elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and embraced that faith, being baptized in the year 1849.

He emigrated to the United States of America, together with his wife Hannah Dean, in the year 1850, arriving at New Orleans on Christmas Eve, on the ship "Zetland," after a five weeks and two days' journey over the ocean.

In January, 1850, he moved up the river to St. Louis, Missouri, staying there 15 weeks, when he moved to Council Bluffs, Iowa, from which place he again moved to Springville, three miles from Kanessville, where he spent the winter.

He migrated to the upper crossing of Keg Creek in the spring of 1851. In the summer of 1851 he cut the lumber and made the outfit with which he crossed the plains. After the wood work was all completed, it was discovered that there was no blacksmith in that region who could iron the wagons. About this time Apostle Ezra T. Benson visited the colony and bade them be of good cheer, for all who so desired would be able to make the journey to Utah that season. This promise was fulfilled, for in a short time a blacksmith arrived, bringing the necessary tools and iron to complete the wagons, as a result of which the journey to Utah was made in safety. Briggs, together with his wife and son Samuel, arrived in Salt Lake City, Utah, on the 7th day of October, 1852, moving to Lehi during the same month. He was engaged at once by John R. Murdock to work on his farm for a short period, after which he engaged in farming for himself, following that avocation principally until his death.

Samuel Briggs had five sons by his first wife, four of whom survived him. In the fall of 1868 he married Emma Thomas, by whom he had twelve children, five sons and seven daughters, nine of whom survived him. He was a good, industrious, enterprising, and thrifty citizen, being identified with such commercial enterprises as the Z. C. M. I. of Salt Lake City, the Provo Woolen Mills, and the Peoples' Co-operative Institution of Lehi. He held successively the offices of teacher, elder, seventy, and high priest in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

He died at Lehi City on October 22, 1898.

JOSEPH BROADBENT.

Joseph Broadbent, son of John Broadbent and Betty Lees, was born August 26, 1836, in Mill Bottom, Oldham, Lancashire, England. For many generations his forefathers worked in the cotton mills and to this life he was very early assigned. After going to school about one year, he commenced to work in the mills at the age of nine years, working half time, as the law would not permit children under 14 years to work full time. Being the oldest child of the family, which was very poor, he was not permitted any leisure time for further education, except a little at the Sabbath School, where reading and writing were taught.

At the age of 19 years, he married Sarah Dixon, whom he had met at the meetings of the Mormon Church, to which organization he had allied himself about a year previous. When the Mormon elders began proselyting in the neighborhood, considerable opposition was manifest by various members of the family, but eventually the father, mother, and children were all converted to the doctrines set forth by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

April 11, 1859, Mr. Broadbent and wife set sail for America on the sailing vessel "Wm. Tapscott," in company with 725 emigrating Saints. They arrived in New York May 14th, and at Florence, Nebraska, on the 25th of the month. On the 9th of June they started across the plains in George Rowley's hand cart company, arriving in Salt Lake City September 4, 1859. The latter part of the journey across the plains was very severe, for after being on rations for some time, the food supply was entirely exhausted and the company camped for several days near Devil's Gate waiting for help from the valley, which arrived in time to save them from actual starvation.

Being acquainted with James Taylor of Lehi, who had been one of the missionaries laboring in Oldham, Mr. Broadbent and wife came direct to Lehi, where they have lived ever since. For twenty-eight years he followed the occupation of farming and mending clocks as a side line. In 1883 with his oldest son, Joseph S., he went into the mercantile business, founding the firm of Broadbent and Son, which has continued with steady growth to the present.

Mr. Broadbent has been an active Church worker, filling a number of positions with honor. He was a member of the first Old Folks Committee; for many years an active member of the Missionary Fund Committee; and a Sunday School worker for over forty-five years. He is still active in the Sunday School and although he is now in his 77th year, he is seldom absent from his post. Being of a musical turn of mind, he has always been connected with some musical organization. Thus he has been a member of choirs and bands both in this country and in England. In the early days he was a member of the Utah Militia, serving as bugler of cavalry under Captain Joseph A. Thomas.

His wife dying in 1888, he married Elizabeth Greenwood, June 26, 1889, a daughter of James and Hannah Turner Greenwood, born October 29, 1843, in Haywood, Lancashire, England. For seven years they lived happily together, but on August 14, 1896, he was again left a widower. On April 8, 1897, he married Sarah Lee Fowler, a widow of the late Henry C. Fowler of Salt Lake City, a daughter of George and Sarah Peaker Lee, born December 25, 1852, in Sheffield, England. She had four daughters living from her former marriage: Lilly Lee (Mrs. John J. McAfee), Jennie V. (Mrs. Charles W. Earl), Henrietta (Mrs. Henry C. Allen), and Ruth Pearl (Mrs. John F. Cutler).

SARAH DIXON BROADBENT.

Sarah D. Broadbent was born in Saddleworth, Yorkshire, England, April 8, 1832, being a daughter of Samuel Dixon and Hannah Percival. When she was twelve years old, her father, who was a stone mason, was killed while working on a bridge, by a large stone falling on him as it was being raised into position by a derrick. Her mother having died some time previous, the duties of keeping house for her three brothers and caring for a baby sister now rested on her. She never went to school, but in addition to keeping house she commenced to work in the cotton mills when quite young.

In 1855 she became converted to the teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and while in attendance at these meetings she met her future husband, Joseph Broadbent, whom she soon after married.

With her husband and a large company of Saints she emigrated to Utah in 1859, crossing the plains in George Rowley's hand cart company. Some time before reaching Devil's Slide the provisions ran so low that rations of 4 ounces of flour a day were issued, which also were exhausted. The travelers finally got so weak for lack of food that it was impossible to proceed farther and some distance this side of Devil's Slide the company halted, waiting for help to come from the valley, as the captain had dispatched a messenger on horseback to Brigham Young, telling of their condition. After waiting a few days, the captain was in the act of negotiating with some traders for a small quantity of flour on Brigham Young's credit, when to their great joy the relief train from the valley hove in sight.

From this time until they reached the valley they had all they wanted to eat. At the mouth of Emigration Canyon the company was met by a brass band and escorted to Pioneer Square. At the mouth of the canyon the women were invited to ride in the wagons which had come out to meet them, but Mrs. Broadbent replied that she had walked every step of the way thus far and she would finish the journey as she had begun.

Mrs. Broadbent is the mother of eight children, three of whom are now living: Joseph Samuel, Eliza Ann (Mrs. Andrew Fjeld), and Geneva Rebecca (Mrs. Benjamin C. Lott). After a lingering illness of seven years, she died September 13, 1888.

MARTIN BUSHMAN.

Martin Bushman was born April 1, 1802, in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. He was the son of Abraham and Esther Bushman, who were of German descent. Martin received a common school education, spending his boyhood days on the farm. He soon acquired a knowledge of farming and became a skilful hand at sowing grain and using the sickle to harvest grain and the scythe to cut grass for hay. The winter months he usually spent threshing grain with a flail, that being the method used then. He also took an especial pride in caring for his cows and horses.

In physique he was very strong and healthy, standing six feet high and weighing 175 pounds. He had light brown hair and blue eyes.

At the age of twenty-five he married Elizabeth Degen of his native state. She was born in Switzerland, September 12, 1802. She was a woman of good character and strong will power. She had learned all the branches of household work and was an expert with the spinning wheel and the needle. Undoubtedly the training both husband and wife had received in their childhood days qualified them to become successful pioneers later.

Thirteen years after their marriage, the couple joined the Mormon Church and moved to Illinois, a journey of one thousand miles by wagon. By this time they had four children. After four years of prosperity and happiness in Nauvoo, they fell victims, with their co-religionists, of mob violence, and were compelled to flee into Iowa, leaving their crops standing. Making this journey in the middle of winter, they suffered intense hardships and two of the children died from exposure. In the western part of Iowa they made themselves still another home where they remained for four years.

At the end of that time they had acquired sufficient means to bring them to Utah, so they set out for the West. Their conveyance was a wagon drawn by two yoke of oxen and four cows. They arrived in Salt Lake in September, 1851, after a journey of five months. After a rest of one week there, they came on to Lehi, where they remained until their death.

They arrived at their new home without any provisions, having eaten their last morsel of bread on the way. The few settlers of Lehi helped them, however, by furnishing Martin employment in the harvesting of the crops. Shortly afterwards, he obtained some land and built a home. Henceforth he was actively engaged in helping to build up Lehi, participating in all the joys and sorrows incident to the settlement of the city.

He proved true to his country and his religion, considerate of his wife and kind to his children. He never turned a stranger away hungry. He died in 1870, aged 68. His wife survived him eight years, finally passing the 76th milestone. Much of her time she spent with the sick and her memory will ever live in the hearts of many of her sex on account of kindnesses bestowed upon them.

The five children the Bushmans brought to Lehi are still alive, the oldest being 83 years old. All have been as their parents—true pioneers; for they have assisted in building up towns from Canada on the north to Arizona on the south, being always known as workers and not drones. Truly as the poet says:

“Toiling hands alone are builders
Of a nation's wealth and fame.”

MARTIN B. BUSHMAN.

Martin Benjamin Bushman, the son of Martin and Elizabeth Bushman, was born Feb. 5, 1841, in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. The first noted event of his life was the journey of over one thousand miles by team from Pennsylvania to Illinois, taken by his parents when he was fifteen months old. Oftimes the ground was his bed while his mother cooked their scanty meals. His next journey was through Iowa in the winter of 1843, when two of his sisters died for want of food and shelter. They stayed at Council Bluffs for three years to get an outfit to come to Utah. Here at the age of eight, he took care of the team and chopped wood for the family, so his father and elder brother could go off to work to get something for them to eat and wear. Then came their journey to Utah in 1851 which took four months of arduous toil.

Following this was their struggle in Lehi to make a home; fence land; make water ditches; plow the land; build houses; stand guard against the Indians; and many other labors and hardships they had to endure.

At the age of twenty he returned to Florence, driving an ox team. The journey took five months, covered two thousand miles, and was to bring the poor

MARTIN B. BUSHMAN.

Saints, who had no teams, to Utah.

He has now lived in Lehi sixty-two years and helped in all its growth and development from a barren waste to a thriving city; he has taken part in making roads, building bridges, making canals, building school houses, and houses for worship. He has held offices in state and church, and has traveled in the United States and Canada.

He has taken great interest in the threshing of grain; his first experience in Utah was pounding it out with a flail, cleaning it in the wind. Then he was interested in the threshing machines. He has owned in part and helped to run every thing from the most primitive machine of early days to the latest improved steam thresher.

His main occupation has been farming and he has taken pride in tilling the soil. The present season, at the age of seventy-two, he has done most all the work on ten acres of land and raised two hundred and forty bushels of wheat, four hundred bushels of potatoes, eighty tons of sugar beets, and some hay.

He is the father of twenty children and has schooled and provided for them and their mothers. He has been exposed much, in camping out, with cold and has likewise been short of food and clothing in early days, yet for all this he is healthy in his old age, and can read and write without glasses. He helped compile this little book, the History of Lehi.

JOHN BUSHMAN.

John Bushman, son of Martin and Elizabeth Degen Bushman, was born June 7, 1843, at Nauvoo, Illinois. At this time the Church was passing through trying scenes. His parents were driven with the Saints from Nauvoo, and after several years of trials and poverty arrived in Salt

JOHN BUSHMAN AND WIFE.

Lake City in 1851. One week later they went to Lehi City. There he spent his boyhood days, always willing to do his full share for the town. Often he was very scantily clothed, and lacking for food, especially during the grasshopper years. With the rest he had very little schooling.

In 1865 he married Lois A. Smith. In the summer of 1866 and 1867 he was in the Black Hawk war.

In 1876 he was called to Arizona, and located at St. Joseph. In 1877, he came back to Lehi and married Mary A. Peterson, who shared with his family all the privations incident to settling a desert country. She named her first son Lehi, in honor of her former home.

After many years of toil they are comfortably situated, surrounded by a large family, who are all faithful members of the Church. Five of their sons have filled honorable missions.

Mr. Bushman has held many positions of trust, having been bishop 25 years, a member of the Board of Education 21 years, Justice of the Peace 14 years, chairman of the Irrigation Company many years, and director of the Bank of Northern Arizona.

He and his wife have passed the 70th milestone, and bid fair to enjoy many more years.

JAMES PERRY CARTER AND WIFE.

James Perry Carter was the son of Josiah Carter and Rebecca Perry, and was born February 23, 1827, in Clutton, Somersetshire, England. He was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints on October 17, 1848, by Edward Roberts. He was ordained an elder in 1852 by James T. Powell.

On February 12, 1853, he married Harriett Wood, a daughter of John Wood and Mary Parry, who was born June 6, 1830, in Michael Church, Herefordshire, England, and who had joined the same church as Mr. Carter in 1844.

In 1861 this family emigrated to Utah, crossing the ocean on the ship Manchester, and the plains in Captain Daniel Jones' company. They came direct to Lehi, where they have since resided except for six years they lived in Salt Lake City.

Carter was ordained a seventy November 28, 1862, and a high priest April 1, 1894. For twenty years he was leader of the Lehi choir. He also took a great interest in education and for thirteen years was identified with the public schools in the capacity of school trustee.

Eight children came to bless this family, four of whom grew up to maturity. They are: Catherine Ester (Mrs. Mosiah Evans), Mary Ann Rosalee (Mrs. Charles Woodhouse, deceased) James, and Clara (Mrs. Ed. Mowry).

The Carter family were among the early settlers "over the creek" and have been active in all social, political, and religious work in that neighborhood and were esteemed as highly respectable citizens. On April 11, 1894, the mother, who was a most estimable woman, died, and about two years later Mr. Carter married Amy Smith, late of England, with whom he lived to the time of his death which occurred October 11, 1898.

JOHN J. CHILD.

John J. Child came to Lehi with his family in 1875 and has continuously made it his home since that time.

He was born in Pennsylvania, near Philadelphia, in 1831. When seven years old he moved with his parents to Belleville, Illinois, where he lived a free life in the woods and grew up accustomed to hard work on the farm.

The death of his mother when he was but nine years old left him one of four motherless children, two boys and two girls. The family was held together by each sharing the burden of providing and caring for home.

In 1853 Mr. Child became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and, with his father's entire family, came to Utah. He lived at Taylorsville for three years and then moved to St. John, Tooele County, where he lived until he came to Lehi.

Mr. Child married Elizabeth de St. Jeor January 8, 1861. He is the father of twelve children, six boys and six girls.

During most of his married life he has been engaged in farming and stock raising.

Among his working associates he was ever a favorite, and among the Indians with whom he had much to do in the early settlement of Tooele County, he was known as a "heap good man." He often served in settling disputes between the whites and Indians, and sometimes among Indians themselves.

ELIZABETH A. CHILD.

Elizabeth A. Child, wife of John J. Child, is the daughter of Francis de and Elizabeth Jane St. Jeor. She was born September 4, 1844, on the Island of Jersey.

In 1855 the family emigrated to this country, and having become members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, came to Utah. They located near St. John (now Clover Creek), where as a girl Mrs. Child lived a life full of hardships due to poverty and dangers from Indians.

Besides being the mother of twelve children and attending to the duties of home incident to the rearing of a large family, she has always been interested in public and church movements planned for the general good. She has acted for many years as a block teacher in the Relief Society, and at seventy years of age is still active in that capacity.

DAVID CLARK.

David Clark was the son of William and Margaret Clark, and was born May 28, 1816, at Lincolnshire, England. Being of a very ambitious turn of mind and desiring to better his condition, he left his mother country in 1841, and sailed for America. He engaged in the stone-cutting business, at which he had remarkable success.

One year after he arrived in this country, he was convinced of the truths contained in the gospel of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and was baptized into the Church by the Prophet Joseph Smith.

He lost his first wife and two children in St. Louis by cholera.

He was married to Miss Myra Williams, November 26, 1849, and as years rolled on they were blessed with six children, namely, James, David, Myra, Rachel, Annie, and Nelson.

Shortly after his marriage, he and his wife prepared for their journey to Utah. On April 7, 1850, they started with a wagon, two yoke of oxen, a cow, and provisions. They joined an independent company of a dozen wagons. The buffalo were so numerous upon the prairie that they caused many delays.

They traveled over the old emigrant trail, reaching Salt Lake City August 26, coming to Lehi September 10, 1850.

Mr. Clark and his family suffered all the hardships of the pioneer life in the early days.

In 1862 he was assigned to missionary work on the Rio Virgin river in southern Utah.

He died March 1, 1889, having borne throughout his whole life a reputation for sterling integrity, and honesty of purpose in all his dealings.

Mr. Clark organized and led the first choir in Lehi.

Mrs. Elias M. Jones.

MYRA WILLIAMS CLARK.

Mrs. Clark was born at Staffordshire, England, March 2, 1821. She was the only one of a family of fourteen to embrace the gospel. She came to America in 1849.

At St. Louis she met David Clark, whom she afterwards married. While crossing the plains in 1850 she gave birth to her first son. They arrived in Lehi September 10, 1850. She was one of the first white women to come to Lehi.

During the early days of Lehi, she took a very active part in the social features, and was loved and honored for the great work she did in nursing the sick and helping those in need.

Mrs. Clark died May 28, 1912, at the age of 91. She was survived by three children: Mrs. Rachel Gaddie, James W. and Annie Clark.

Three children preceded her to the great beyond: Mrs. Myra Thomas (wife of John J. Thomas), David Clark, and Nelson Clark.

Mrs. Elias M. Jones.

WILLIAM CLARK.

William Clark was born in Worcester, England, July 26, 1825. He came to America in 1848, and followed the avocation of plasterer in St. Joseph, Missouri, for several years. He married Emily K. Bryant just prior to leaving England, September 20, 1848. The year following, his wife died in childbirth. During the winter of 1851, he married Mrs. Jane Stevenson Ross. The following spring they started for Utah, crossing the plains by ox team, and arriving in Salt Lake City in the fall. In the fall of 1853 he arrived in Lehi, three years after the first settlers.

Probably no one has done more in a material way towards the city's upbuilding. Hardly any industrial project was ever commenced in the city without his assistance. He was a pioneer plasterer, doing this part of the mechanical work on most of the early homes and public places. He was one of the most successful farmers, and was one of the first Lehi citizens to engage in the sheep industry. He was an organizer and director in the People's Co-operative Mercantile Institution, the Lehi Irrigation Company, and the Lehi Commercial and Savings Bank.

He served several terms in the City Council, was road supervisor for a series of years, and served a long time as pound keeper. He was also an active worker in a church capacity, filling a mission to England in 1880 for the Mormon Church, and serving as a counselor to Bishop T. R. Cutler until Lehi was divided into four wards. At the time of his death he was patriarch of the Alpine Stake.

JANE CLARK

Jane Clark, daughter of Samuel and Emily Stevenson, was born in Canada, December 5, 1820. Both parents died while she was in her infancy, after moving to Newark, New Jersey. She married Stephen W. Ross, March 2, 1838, by whom she had five children, four boys and one girl. Mr. Ross died December 9, 1849.

May 10, 1851, she started for Utah with her two sons and daughter, arriving in Council Bluffs in July. That same winter she met and married William Clark, a widower, by whom she had seven children, six girls and one boy. The following spring they came on to Utah, making the trip with a yoke of oxen and a yoke of cows, arriving in Salt Lake City in September. The summer of 1853 was spent on Cottonwood, and in the fall they moved to Lehi, which was her home till her death, September 21, 1895.

JANE CLARK.

She was a friend to the sick and needy, relieving many from their physical sufferings, and contributing freely of her substance to the poor.

SARAH T. COLEMAN.

Sarah Thornton Coleman, daughter of William Thornton and Elizabeth Christian, was born June 11, 1806, in Paxton, Huntingdonshire, England. With her family she joined the Church of Latter-day Saints in the year 1841 and emigrated to Nauvoo, Illinois, soon after. The family lived on the farm of Hyrum Smith, brother of the Prophet Joseph Smith. Here her husband, Prime Coleman, and the oldest daughter died. The mother, with her seven children, was left to share the hardships and mobbings with the other Saints.

SARAH T. COLEMAN.

After the martyrdom of the Prophet and his brother, Sister Coleman and family moved to the Eleventh Ward, in the city of Nauvoo. Here she became acquainted with Bishop David Evans through receiving help from the ward. Trouble for the Saints was steadily increasing, and when companies were formed to move, she and family were placed in Bishop David Evans' company. For three years they moved from place to place in Missouri, and then made the final move to Utah, arriving in Salt Lake City in the fall of 1850. They remained there that winter and the next spring moved to Lehi, then known as Dry Creek.

Sarah T. Coleman passed through the hardships of pioneer life, raised a highly respected family, and lived the life of a Latter-day Saint. She was respected and loved by all who knew her, and was president of the first Relief Society organized in Lehi. She died March 1, 1892, at the ripe age of 86 years, nine months.

SYLVANUS COLLETT.

Among the early settlers of Lehi were Daniel Collett and family, the eldest son being Sylvanus, then a young man about 21. Sylvanus' mother's name was Esther Jones, a native of Wales, while his father was an Englishman of Norman ancestry. The youth of "Syl" Collett, as he was familiarly called, did not prevent him from playing a prominent part in the early days of Lehi and Utah county. Were there Indians to subdue, he was always one of the first to respond to the call to arms. He was of heroic physique, tall, straight, broad-shouldered, and athletic, and he was entirely without fear. If a parley with the Indians was necessary, "Syl" was usually chosen, as he talked the vernacular of the natives as though to the manner born.

While living at Lehi, Sylvanus Collett married Lydia Karen, a daughter of Thomas Karen, and their first son, Sylvanus, Jr., was drowned in the creek near Lehi.

In the early "sixties" Sylvanus Collett removed to Cache Valley, acquiring an extensive ranch where Cache Junction now stands, his father meanwhile being one of the first four men to settle in Plain City, Weber County.

At Logan, "Syl" Collett was a colonel of militia in the Nauvoo Legion, and took part in the Indian war at Smithfield in 1863. After one or two men had been killed, the Indian chief was captured and held under guard by Colonel Collett, E. R. Miles, and Thomas Winn. The chief's sons came near to the settlement, and at a signal the father made a dash for liberty. Three shots rang out, the redskin leaped high into the air and when he struck the ground he was a "good Injun." The writer of this sketch once asked Mr. Winn his opinion as to whose shot put a quietus on the desperado, and he laconically replied: "I am no marksman, and Miles was but little better; "Syl" could hit a fly's heel a thousand yards with a blank cartridge."

In the winter of 1863 occurred the famous fight with Indians on Battle Creek, in southern Idaho, when General Connor of Fort Douglas wiped out a combination of Bannocks, Snakes, and Shoshones, but with a loss to his own men that made a decided nucleus to the military cemetery on the bench east of Salt Lake City. A short time previous to the engagement, Colonel Collett and Thomas E. Ricks went as special envoys from the Cache Valley settlers to the entrenched Indians on Battle Creek, and secured the return of some animals that the redskins had stolen a short time before. When the Fort Douglas army reached Logan, General Connor summoned Messrs. Collett and Ricks and went over the situation with them. When a suggestion was offered as to the mode of attack, the intrepid general curtly replied: "Gentlemen, I am asking for information, not advice."

From a nearby eminence, Colonel Collett and Dudley D. Merrill witnessed the slaughter of General Connor's men, until late in the day, when a wicked fire from howitzers mounted on mules' backs ended the fray in the almost complete annihilation of the Indians. Colonel Collett always averred that Chief Pocatello was not in the Battle Creek fight, local history to the contrary notwithstanding, and he knew thoroughly well whereof he spoke.

After leaving Cache Valley, Sylvanus Collett lived for a while in Nounan Valley, Bear Lake County, Idaho, where he grazed large herds of horses, cattle, and sheep, from whence he removed to Smith's Fork, now Cokeville, Wyoming, where he lived the remainder of his life, engaged in mining, stock raising, and kindred pursuits. He died while on a visit to Salt Lake City, April 10, 1901.

"Syl" Collett possessed characteristics that endeared him to all who had his acquaintance. To his bravery, before alluded to, were added a loyalty to friend and a kindly and charitable consideration for foe in remarkable degree. Of the latter phase of his disposition note the following incident: Through his instrumentality a malefactor was being turned over to officers of the law. The man raved and swore vengeance at the first opportunity. "Syl" unbuckled a horse pistol from his belt and handed it to the culprit with the remark: "Please don't shoot me in the back." The weapon was returned unused.

THOMAS R. CUTLER.

An essential requirement for success in a pioneer country is adaptability. New conditions must be met, new methods of life adopted, new problems solved. He who possesses this quality and with it the power of application is bound to achieve success. Thomas Robinson Cutler was such a man, Born June 2, 1844, in Sheffield, England, his parents were Thomas Cutler and Elizabeth Robinson Cutler. His father was also a cutler by trade. Thomas R. received an ordinary education, and at the age of fifteen he entered into the work of his life-business. For a number of years he was a clerk in a foreign shipping house, and then with his family, all of whom had been converted to the teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, he emigrated to Utah. He arrived in Salt Lake October 6, 1864, and lived for a year in a little house near the mouth of Big Cottonwood Canyon.

Next year he moved to Lehi and again took up his business career, this time in the employ of the firm of T. and W. Taylor. When this concern later sold out to the Lehi Union Exchange, he arranged for them the terms of the sale. For a number of years he engaged in sheep and cattle raising.

It was when the formation of the Utah Central Railway became a fact that the business acumen of T. R. Cutler made its first step and launched him upon a career which has had few equals in the commercial life of Utah. Recognizing what the railroad would do for Lehi commercially, he conceived the idea of establishing a store near the proposed depot, so in 1871, in connection with James W. and Thomas Taylor, he built a small adobe structure where now stands the Utah Banking Company. For a year he conducted a store here. When, in 1872, the railroad reached Lehi, the concern was in a position to realize upon their foresight. Accordingly, the People's Co-operative Institution was organized, and Cutler became the manager. This company has prospered since its establishment, due in no small part to its successful management. Thomas R. is now the president of the organization.

When the Utah Sugar Company was organized in 1890, the promoters experienced no trouble in deciding whom they desired to control the affairs of the new industry; they immediately selected the young man from Lehi who had made so great a success of his business there. He was therefore designated general manager of the Utah Sugar Company. The success of the beet sugar industry in the West has been due in no small part to

Thomas R. Cutler. His foresight, business sagacity, reliable judgment, and untiring industry have enabled him to conduct the company which employs him, from its possession of a single factory in Lehi, to a gigantic corporation which owns eight factories in Utah and Idaho, furnishes employment to thousands of people, and gives to the farmers of the two states immense sums of money each year for their beets. The company is a monument to his success.

But the sugar business is not the only field in which Mr. Cutler has been active. He was one of the promoters of the Lehi Commercial and Savings Bank and the Union Hotel. Other concerns which have benefited Lehi only indirectly, which he has been instrumental in forming, or active in conducting, are the Provo Woolen Mills, and Cutler Brothers Company. In addition he is a director in the Utah State National Bank, president of the Continental Life Insurance Company, and an important member of numerous other companies. He has also engaged to some extent in the mining business.

His public work in Lehi embraces various offices with which the people have honored him. He has been a member of the City Council and city treasurer. In politics he has been a Republican, but in spite of the earnest solicitation of his friends, he has almost universally refused to run for office.

But it is in his ecclesiastical capacity that the people of Lehi will longest remember Thomas R. Cutler. When Bishop David Evans resigned, on September 5, 1879, Thomas R. was the choice of all the people as his successor. For twenty-four years he directed the fortunes of the Lehi Ward, and by his ability to lead, his sympathy for each of those over whom he presided, his broad-mindedness, and his unbounded charity, he won a permanent place in the hearts of the people.

In 1904 the ever-widening scope of his business compelled him to change his residence to Salt Lake City. It was with intense sorrow that the people accepted his resignation as Bishop and saw him depart for his new home. But always they will claim him; always will they think of him as Bishop Cutler of Lehi.

ELISHA H. DAVIS.

Elisha Hildebrand Davis, the son of Isaac and Edith Richards Davis, was born in West township, Columbia County, Ohio, October 22, 1815. His great-great-grandfather, John Davis, came from Wales and settled in Salem County, New Jersey, where the great-grandfather, Thomas Davis, and the grandfather, Isaac Davis, as well as the father, were born.

While the family were living at West Township, Ohio, they were converted to the gospel as taught by the Mormon elders, and in 1838 most of the members of Isaac Davis' family, including Elisha, joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Soon after, the family moved to Illinois, and after residing in several places, settled near Nauvoo.

Elisha was baptized August 19, 1838, by Edwin D. Woolley, and on the 8th of the following January he was ordained an elder under the hands of Lorenzo D. Barnes, H. Sagers, and Edwin D. Woolley. The next day, in company with three elders who had ordained him, he started on a mission to the Eastern States. He labored for about two years in the states of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, assisting in raising up several branches of the church. On this mission he was instrumental in bringing the gospel to Bishop Edward Hunter, Bishop Elijah Sheets, Bishop Jacob Weiler, the Rhodembach family of Cedar Fort, the Bushman family of Lehi, and many others who afterward joined and became prominent and faithful members of the church.

He often worked in the harvest fields with the people and in this way earned sufficient means to supply himself with clothing and food, and at the same time won the love and confidence of those with whom he associated. In the fall of 1840 he started for Nauvoo, traveling with a family he had baptized. He arrived some time in the following March, and was present at the laying of the cornerstone of the Nauvoo Temple, April 6, 1841.

Having had a brief visit of about six weeks with his father's family, on the 27th of April, 1841, he started on his second mission east of the mountains, which lasted about three years, when he was called by Brigham Young, who had now become the president of the church, on a mission to England, arriving in Liverpool August 19, 1844, on the sixth anniversary of his baptism. During his entire time in the British mission he presided over the London Conference, and at the close of his ministry, on Christmas day, 1846, he took to wife Mary Ann Mitchell. In company with John Taylor, Parley P. Pratt, Joseph Caine, and others, he set sail for the United States on the good ship "America." After a perilous journey, they landed at New Orleans, March 7, 1847, and proceeded up the river to Saint Louis, and thence to Winter Quarters, where Elisha found that his father and sister, Sabina, had died a few days before his arrival.

Elisha and wife remained in Winter Quarters about a year, when they re-crossed the river to Iowa, and built a house on the ground where the Liberty pole stood, and where the Mormon Battalion was rallied. They lived there two years, their daughter, Mary Ann, and son, Elisha, being born at this place. They then removed ten miles east to Keg Creek, where Sarah Agnes was born; remained there a year; and emigrated to Utah in 1852. Mr. Davis tended Bishop Gardner's mill on Jordan River the first winter, as he was a miller by trade, and in the spring of 1853 the family moved to Lehi. In the spring of 1854 they moved to Bountiful, Davis County, and for over a year Elisha ran a grist mill for Heber C. Kimball. In 1855 they lived in Bingham Fort, near Ogden, and in 1857 returned to Bountiful.

Elisha took part in the Echo Canyon war, and in the "Move" south he once more brought his family to Lehi, where they have since resided. From 1858 to 1869 he had charge of Samuel Mulliner's grist mill, which stood on the present site of the sugar factory. From then to the time of his death, he followed farming and stock raising.

Mr. Davis lived to a ripe old age, beloved and respected by all who knew him. As a result of his early training in the church, he was a theologian of marked ability, and a clear, logical, and forceful speaker, very devoted to his church and a good citizen. He was one of the early members of the City Council, and held other positions of trust and honor.

The following is from his journal:

"To My Posterity:

"During a life of nearly 82 years, 59 years of which time having been spent in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I can testify to the happiness of a life of moral honesty and religious devotion. Experience has taught me the high value of moral purity and religious sentiment, as reaching far above earthly pleasures, and the gratification of appetite and passion which cannot produce lasting joy.

"My success in life has come through my not borrowing money and mortgaging my home, but always living within my means, and sustaining myself and family by the sweat of my face.

"When I owned little, I lived on little and was satisfied. My married life of 46 years has been a happy one; my wife was always true, gentle, faithful, kind, and wise, a help mate in very deed to me. During our entire married life of 46 years, we never had a hard feeling, nor cross word, but lived in love together, always adopting the rule of speaking gently and kindly to and of each other; and now, at the advanced age of 82 years, standing as it were on the verge of eternity, my great desire and advice to all of you is to be faithful and true to our holy religion, to never depart from the faith and turn against God.

Every day that I live, I rejoice more and more in the great work of the Lord, and in the hope of eternal life.

"Your loving father and grandfather,

"Elisha Hildebrand Davis."

MARY ANN M. DAVIS.

Mary Ann Mitchell Davis, the daughter of Robert and Sarah Hunt Mitchell, was born in London, England, October 19, 1822; was baptized a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in 1842; and was married to Elisha H. Davis in London, December 25, 1846. She set sail with her husband for the United States on the day of her marriage, and settled in Winter Quarters, Nebraska, where she lived one year. She was in Iowa three years, and then emigrated to Utah in 1852.

In Lehi, Mrs. Davis has held many offices of trust and honor in the organizations of her sex. For many years she was the treasurer of the Relief Society; was the third lady teacher called to labor in the Sunday School, in 1866; and continued to act until the time of her death. On the 16th of October, 1888, she was set apart as a president in the Primary Association, a work with which she was connected for a number of years. She had great influence over the young, whom she won to her by strong affection and undying love. She was a true wife and a most affectionate mother. As a Saint she lived a holy life, and had the gift of interpretation of tongues, which she received in her early association with the church, and which she retained through life. She died September 14, 1892.

Her family consisted of the following children: Mary Ann, born near Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 31, 1848; living at present in Lehi.

Elisha Hildebrand, born near Council Bluffs, February 7, 1850; now living in Lehi.

Sarah Agnes (Mrs. Charles Karren), born on Keg Creek, Pottawattamie County, Iowa, March 21, 1852; now living in Magrath, Canada.

Orinda Jane (Mrs. Dilbert H. Allred), born at Bountiful, Davis County, Utah, April 14, 1854; now of Lehi.

George Edward, born in Bingham Fort, near Ogden, February 4, 1857; now of Lehi.

Alphonzo Mitchel, born February 19, 1859, near Lehi; still residing in Lehi.

Edith Richards, born near Lehi, December 17, 1860; died.

W. W. DICKERSON.

William Walter Dickerson, son of James W. and Winnie L. Rice Dickerson, was born July 1, 1880, at Lamar, Benton County, Mississippi. I was baptized into the Mormon Church July 4, 1897, in Mississippi, and married Effie Bell Curtis, October 24, 1897, near Lamar, Mississippi, where we remained until 1899, at which time we moved to Tennessee, and lived in the city of Memphis until August, 1903. We then came to Utah and settled in Lehi, August 21, 1903, where I have remained since.

I have been engaged in the business of carpentering and building in Lehi. My wife and children were sealed to me November 3, 1904, in the Salt Lake Temple. I was ordained an elder March 7, 1904; was called to work in the Sunday School of Lehi Third Ward, in 1905; was set apart as president of the M. I. A., in 1906. I did my first baptizing October 27, 1906, when I baptized twenty-five children. I was ordained a seventy February 4, 1906; called as an aide in the Alpine Stake Religion Class work, in 1908; was called to the Bishopric of the Third Ward as First Counselor to Bishop Lewis, in 1910; and was ordained a high priest in 1910.

I was elected school trustee July 8, 1911.

JOSEPH A. DORTON.

Joseph A. Dorton, son of John Dorton and Catherine Carl, was born June 5, 1821, at Stockport, Cheshire, England. He came to Utah in 1855, and moved to Lehi in 1857. He was the first butcher in Lehi, also the first one to move outside of the old fort wall, moving over on the divide between this valley and Cedar Valley. He had remarkable skill in dealing with the Indians.

W. W. DICKERSON.

He crossed the plains with the Saints to enjoy freedom of worship, and made two trips back to pilot two more immigrant trains to Utah.

He married Martha Clayton in 1858, and was the father of twelve children.

JOSEPH A. DORTON.

In 1860 he conducted the stage line between Salt Lake and Cedar Fort.

He died November 5, 1898.

MARTHA C. DORTON.

Martha Clayton Dorton, daughter of George Clayton and Jane Bingham, was born July 16, 1837, at Greenlane, Cheshire, England. She emigrated with her parents to Utah in 1855, and moved to Lehi in 1856. She was a member of the first choir in Lehi.

She married Joseph A. Dorton, in 1858, and was the mother of twelve children.

She has been a resident of Lehi 57 years.

EDWARD WM. EDWARDS.

Edward William Edwards was born in Carmarthenchere, Wales, March 3, 1831. He joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints September, 1849. He moved from Carmarthenchere to Llanelly, where he was appointed counselor of that branch of the church. In the spring of 1854 he left his native home for America, landing in New York in June, 1854. In August, 1854, he moved west to Illinois. In the spring of 1855 he moved to Saint Louis, Missouri, and a company of fifty, under the direction of Erastus Snow, went to Fort Riley to build the fort. He was appointed teacher of the camp by Bishop Charles Chord. The camp broke up, and they went in the fall of the same year to Saint Louis, where he acted as nurse in the cholera plague, and secured means by which to cross the plains.

The spring of 1856 he moved to Florence, Nebraska, and remained there until the camp was ready to move out on the plains, which was with the first hand cart company, in charge of Captain Edmond Elsworth. They arrived on the public square, Salt Lake City, October 3, 1856.

MRS. EDWARD W. EDWARDS.

He hired out to Bishop Woolley to work in the saw mills in Little Cottonwood canyon. The latter part of 1857 he moved to Spanish Fork and worked for Bishop Butler until the move south before the arrival of Johnston's army. When he returned, he went to the White Mountains on an exploring expedition. After the army had arrived, he moved to Camp Floyd and worked at his trade tailoring for the soldiers. While employed at Camp Floyd he was shot in the leg by an intoxicated soldier, who, after finding out what he had done, did everything in his power to shield himself, paying all expense of doctors and medical treatment.

After his recovery he moved to Lehi in the spring of 1859, and married Amanda Evans, April 29, 1859, who was the daughter of the late Bishop David Evans of the Lehi ward. She was born April 21, 1844, at Hancock County, Illinois. She passed peacefully away on March 25, 1881. They had born through their union eleven children, eight boys and three girls.

He was ordained in the Fiftieth quorum of Seventies, at Spanish Fork, and was transferred to the Sixty-eighth quorum, in Lehi. He was a block teacher for many years in the Lehi Ward, and was ordained a high priest about two years before his death. He died in American Fork, November 29, 1903.

The funeral was held at Lehi, December 1st, Counselor A. R. Anderson having charge of the meeting.

Singing, "Heaven is my home."

Prayer, William Southwick.

Singing, "O my Father."

The speakers were: Thomas R. Jones, William Clark, John Austin, Sr., and A. R. Anderson.

Singing, hymn 406, "Rest, Rest."

The deceased was laid to rest in the Lehi cemetery, the grave being dedicated by Joseph Kirkham.

He was assistant chorister in the Lehi ward for many years.

ABEL EVANS.

Abel Evans, son of Samuel Evans, was born June 24, 1813, at Carmarthenshire, South Wales. His boyhood and early life were spent in the coal mines of his native land. He never joined any of the religious denominations, although he always lived an honest, moral, and upright life. About the year 1840 he received the gospel as taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in Glamorganshire, South Wales, being the second person baptized in Wales. For the next ten years he devoted himself to the ministry, traveling in South and North Wales, and as a result a great many people accepted the gospel at his hands.

He emigrated to America in 1850, and while crossing the ocean, he became acquainted with Mary Jones, whom he married after landing in America. The next two years were spent in Council Bluffs, and in 1852 he and his wife crossed the plains with ox teams, coming direct to Lehi, where he resided for thirteen years. He was called on a mission to his native land in 1865, and labored there for a period of one and a half years, at which time he slept in a damp bed, from the effects of which he died November 30, 1866, firm in his Masters' cause.

He was the husband of three wives, namely: Mary Jones, Martha Morgan, and Jane Davis. He was the father of sixteen children, nine of whom reached maturity, namely: Abel John, William, Samuel, Mary (Mrs. Thomas Webb), Sarah (Mrs. William Sabey of Magrath, Canada), Catherine (Mrs. William R. Yates), Hyrum, Edward (now of Beach, Idaho), Martha (Mrs. George C. Phillips, deceased), Jane (Mrs. Abraham Gudmunson, deceased).

Abel Evans was a man of strong faith, and was especially endowed with the gift of healing and the discerning of spirits. He was counselor to Bishop David Evans for a number of years as well as being president of the high priests' quorum; was marshal of Lehi; and held a number of other civil offices.

MARY JONES EVANS.

Mary Jones Evans was born August 1, 1827, at Carmarthenshire, South Wales. She joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints about the year 1849 in her native land and emigrated to America in 1859, and while on the way became acquainted with Abel Evans, to whom she was married on their arrival in America. She lived in Council Bluffs two years and in the spring of 1852 started to Utah. Their team consisted of one yoke of cattle, one cow and a two-year-old heifer. They arrived in Lehi in the fall of the same year.

MARY JONES EVANS.

Mrs. Evans went through all the hardships pertaining to pioneer life. She was left a widow in 1866, her husband having died on a mission to Wales, leaving a family of six children, three boys and three girls, the oldest twelve years old. Although she had the care of raising her family, she was never known to complain and was always cheerful. She was known for her hospitality. She died April 3, 1894.

ABEL JOHN EVANS.

Abel John Evans was born December 20, 1852, at Lehi City, Utah, being the son of Abel Evans and Mary Jones Evans. At the age of twelve years his father went on a mission to Great Britain, and in November, 1867, died there, thus becoming a martyr for the cause of his Master, and leaving Abel John the eldest of nine children to take the lead in all the hardships which the people of that time were forced to undergo. He had had but very little time to go to school, and indeed the opportunities of those days were but poor for those able to go. He worked on the farm and in the canyons, and at other manual labor, such as he could find to do.

At the age of 21 years, on January 26, 1874, he was ordained to the office of an elder, under the hands of Andrew Smith Johnson, and was married the same day to Louisa Emeline Zimmerman, in the Endowment House at Salt Lake City, Utah. He afterwards became the father of eleven children, three boys and eight girls, seven of whom are still living, namely: Harriet Mindwell (Mrs. Heber Webb), William Erastus, Robert James, Rose Ethel (Mrs. Angus Elmer Peterson), Hazel Julia (Mrs. George F. Holmstead), Vervene June, and Winifred Erma.

Soon after becoming an elder, he was chosen as one of the counselors to Lot Russon, who was president of the elders' quorum at Lehi; on December 30, 1883, was ordained to the office of a seventy under the hands of Andrew A. Peterson; and in April, 1889, went on a mission to Great Britain. On January 15, 1893, he was ordained a high priest, under the hands of Abraham H. Cannon, one of the apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and called to the High Council in the Utah Stake of Zion. He acted in that position until the Alpine Stake of Zion was organized, on January 13, 1901, at which time he was made one of the stake presidency, the position he now occupies, having been set apart by Apostle Teasdale.

In the industrial line, Mr. Evans has always been a strong advocate of home industry and local institutions, being a stockholder in the following companies: Provo Woolen Mills, Utah-Idaho Sugar Company, Utah Banking Company, State Bank of Lehi, Bank of American Fork, American Fork Co-op., Intermountain Life Insurance Company, Provo Reservoir Company, Utah Lake Irrigation Company, Salt Lake & Utah Railroad Company, and many other minor enterprises.

Mr. Evans was a member of the City Council four terms, 1881-1888; during the last three terms was alderman, which included the duties of justice of the peace, and in 1891 was elected mayor, this time running on a Democratic ticket, being the first election since the division of the people on national party lines. He has always been a strong Democrat in politics. He served as a member of the county court for four years, 1892-1896, at which time he was elected a member of the Utah Constitutional Convention and there took a prominent part in framing the state constitution. He served as a senator in the first, second, third, and fourth State Legislatures of the State of Utah, and at the last session was chosen president of the senate by the unanimous vote of his party.

Although Mr. Evans had very few educational opportunities in his youth, by determination and study, pursued at odd times, he has risen into the ranks of professional men. Although he never attended a high school nor a law school a day in his life, yet on May 13, 1901, he was the happy recipient of a certificate from the Supreme Court of the State of Utah, which entitles him to practice law in all of the courts of the State.

W. S. EVANS.

William Samuel Evans was born at Lehi, February 1, 1855. He was the second son of Abel and Mary Jones Evans. He spent his boyhood days helping on his mother's farm and doing other odd jobs until 1874, when he married Geneva Clark, daughter of William and Jane Clark.

W. S. EVANS.

They then moved on to a homestead in what is now known as New Survey. There on the farm they raised their family of twelve children, four boys and eight girls, ten of whom are now living. About 1900 he built him a home, on Fourth North and Second West, which he still owns. He has followed various occupations, such as running a threshing machine, shearing sheep, and general contracting. He is a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; was ordained an elder in 1874, and joined the quorum a little later. When the Alpine Stake was organized, he became the president of the Sixth quorum of elders, and held that office until he was released to become a seventy.

He has held several civil offices, serving one term in the City Council, one term as member of the Irrigation Company, and, at different times, nine years as a member of the School Board. During his terms of office, they built the Franklin School, the Primary School, the Grammar School, the new Franklin School, and the Sego Lily addition. He also served two years as vice president of the Alpine High School Board. He served on the committee that erected the new High School building in American Fork. At the last election he was elected City Councilor on the Peoples' ticket.

DAVID EVANS.

Bishop David Evans, son of Israel and Abigail Evans, was born in Cecil County, Maryland, October 27, 1804.

His early training in life was on the frontier in Pennsylvania. He was of a rugged character, such as to fit him for the events which were to follow. His career was remarkable for his great industry, frugality, and charity to the poor, his public-spiritedness and broad, self-acquired education.

In 1826 he married Mary Beck and moved to Richland County, Ohio. Here he bought and opened up a new farm, where he lived until he was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, April 6, 1833. On the 11th of the same month he was ordained a priest and immediately commenced traveling and preaching, selling his farm to enable him to perform his missionary labors. He was ordained to the office of an elder July 21, 1833. He went with Zion's camp from Ohio to Missouri in 1834, and received ordination to the First quorum of Seventy under the hands of the Prophet Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, April 29, 1835.

He attended the "School of the Prophets" in Kirtland, and then left Ohio for Missouri in charge of a company of Saints, most of whom he had baptized himself. Here he bought land and again made a home. He was with the Saints through all their persecutions in Missouri, among which was the terrible massacre at Haun's Mill.

In December, 1838, he and family were compelled to flee from the state of Missouri, leaving all their property behind. He then went to Adams County, Illinois, and commenced preaching and baptizing many. He lost his wife, after which he moved to Nauvoo and married Barbara Ann Ewell November, 1841. In 1842 when Nauvoo was organized into wards he was ordained bishop of the Eleventh Ward. He remained here until the Saints were driven out, when he was appointed captain of a company to cross the plains, and arrived in the valleys September 15, 1850. He moved to Lehi the following February, over which place he was appointed to preside as bishop, the duties of which he faithfully performed for 28 years, tendering his resignation on account of old age and failing health, August 24, 1879.

He located the city of Lehi and laid it off into blocks and lots with a pocket compass, tape line, and square. He was elected to the first Legislature of Utah and acted for many years as a member of that body. He was Colonel of Militia, served as Major of the Lehi Military District several terms and was Mayor of Lehi City three terms.

He married Climena Gibson in 1854, Rebecca Coleman in 1856, and Christina Holm in 1861; and was the father of 41 children and a good provider for all his family. His death occurred June 23, 1883, and the following day a special train was dispatched from Salt Lake City which brought President Woodruff, Bishop Hunter and several other leading men to attend the funeral. The cortege to the cemetery was the largest ever formed in Lehi, 115 vehicles being in line.

BARBARA ANN EVANS.

Barbara Ann Ewell Evans, the daughter of Pleasant and Barbara Ewell, was born the 16th day of May, 1821, in the state of Virginia, Albemarl County.

"My father and mother left that state when I was nine years old, and moved to Bedford County, state of Tennessee, where we remained three years. In 1833 we moved to Ray County, Missouri. There I witnessed the falling of the stars, November 13, 1833.

"It was in my father's house that I first heard the sound of the everlasting gospel, preached by Brother Jacob Foutz. The next elder I heard was David Evans. My mother being first to believe, she was baptized by David Evans, and the family soon followed.

"We remained in Missouri until the Saints were driven from that state. My mother and sister being very sick when we left, they both died shortly after our arrival in Illinois, and in the course of a few months another of my sisters died, each leaving a small child which I had charge of in connection with my father's family, which consisted of two brothers, two sisters, my father, myself, and the two small babies of my sisters, all of whom I had charge of, and I being only 18 years of age.

"I was baptized by Elder David Evans, and confirmed by him June 10, 1837, and I was married to him on the 23rd of November, 1841.

"I saw Joseph and Hyrum Smith after their martyrdom. It was a solemn day among the Saints. We felt like a flock of sheep without a shepherd, but the Lord had another shepherd to lead his Saints. It was Brigham Young. I was present the day he was set apart to lead the church. No Saint could dispute it, for it did seem when he spoke as though it was Joseph's own voice that was addressing us. I never shall forget that day nor how the Spirit of the Lord was poured out upon the people; it came so mild, yet so penetrating that every heart beat with joy to know we had a man of God to lead the Saints. Oh, what a consolation it was to know we were not forgotten.

"I remained in Illinois until the exodus from that state, which was in 1846. Some of the Saints had neither teams nor wagons. The brethren united together and made wagons for those that had none; by that means all had wagons, but not teams, and we were obliged to get away, as the mob was howling around, and Nauvoo was threatened. So my husband, being bishop of the Eleventh Ward, concluded to take the teams they had and move as many as they could. We made a start with what teams we had, crossed the Mississippi River, went a day's journey, and set the families down on the prairie. The next day they took the teams and brought the rest.

"Soon after the men got employment breaking prairie and other work. We took oxen and milk cows, so in the fall all had teams and provisions for winter. I did considerable spinning in the tent, also quilted several quilts. One great blessing, we were generally well. We did not have many luxuries, still we felt thankful for what we had. We then started for Council Bluffs, but it was late in the fall, winter had set in, and we stopped on the headwaters of the Nodaway. The men cut hay and put up log huts. My husband made a side-loom, and I did considerable weaving that winter. The cattle could not live on the frost-bitten hay so they commenced to die; our provisions began to get short; and we were obliged to leave in the month of February, 1847. We started for Missouri, lost our way, our teams that were left gave out, and we had to kill and eat them to save our lives.

"My husband and two other men, Joseph Smith (Lehi) and Shaw, went down to Missouri to get fresh teams and provisions, while they left their families camped on a small stream which was called Starvation Creek. We suffered from hunger and cold, but we did not complain, for we were united; we truly lived the order; we all shared alike. My husband came with fresh teams and provisions. I tell you it was a day of rejoicing. We had not heard from them since they left. They had had hard work to get teams. The people were so prejudiced against the Mormons, they were almost to return without anything. My husband told the people he would return and die with the rest of the people. One gentleman spoke and said, 'Can't you do something for these men; they seem to be honest?' The men began to volunteer, and he soon had all the provisions and teams he wanted.

"We then made another start for Missouri. The snow had fallen to a great depth, and we could not keep on the divide. After wallowing in the snow for four or five days, camping on the prairie without fire, we arrived in Nodaway County, Missouri, March 1, 1847. My son, Joseph, was born April 7th, in a house without doors, windows, chimneys or floor. My food was corn bread ground on a hand mill; we had bran for coffee. We stayed there three years, had plenty of work, made a good outfit and started for Utah, May 15th, 1850. My baby was ten days old when we started. After the company got together, Bishop Evans was appointed captain. They were organized, and on June 15 we made a start for Utah.

"The cholera soon broke out in camp. People were stricken down on every side. There were five deaths in our company, my husband's oldest daughter, Mrs. Ira Hinckley, was one among them. That was a trying time. I had six small children, but none of them had the horrible disease. Had it not been for that we should have had a pleasant journey. After we arrived at Laramie, we all enjoyed good health.

"In the year 1850, September 15th, we arrived at Salt Lake Valley, and lived there until February 15, 1851. We then moved to what was then called Dry Creek. We have made our home in Lehi ever since.

"My husband was appointed bishop of Lehi, also postmaster and served several terms in the Legislature. Our son, Hyrum, was drowned at Pelican Point, in Utah Lake, July 29, 1862, age 9 years, 21 days. He had been baptized.

"I served as Second Counselor in the Relief Society for eleven years, I have done work in three temples, and have a little more to do, but my health would not permit. If I cannot do it, some of my family will attend to it.

"My son, Eleazer Evans, was called on a mission to Germany. He left October 16, 1883, took a severe cold while in London; still he would not give up until he arrived in Berlin. He remained sick all winter. The president released him to return home. He lived just three weeks after his return, when his noble spirit took its flight to God who gave it.

"I am the mother of fifteen children, seven boys and eight girls, ten of whom are living besides one adopted child, the daughter of Louise and John Beck; grand children 101, 86 living, 21 dead; great-grandchildren 51, 43 living, 8 are dead. I was 75 years old May 16, 1896. All my children living are married and have families, and live in Utah. I have been a widow 13 years, was left with three children. I feel thankful through all the meandering and shifting scenes of mortal life. I have been preserved thus far in the faith of the gospel, and can testify that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God."

REBECCA C. EVANS.

Rebecca Coleman Evans, born October 4, 1838, in Bedfordshire, England, came to Lehi February

REBECCA C. EVANS.

ISRAEL EVANS.

Israel Evans was born in Hanover, Columbus County, Ohio, October 2, 1828, his parents being David and Mary Beck Evans. At the age of five years he went with his parents to Missouri, and four years later to Nauvoo, Illinois. As his father's earnings were no more than sufficient for the support of the family, Israel's education was limited to the simple studies taught in the district schools.

In July, 1846, he enlisted in the Mormon Battalion at Council Bluffs, hoping that his enlistment might save some older man of family from service. He received his discharge after a year of severe duty in California. He then went to work at Sutter's Mill and was employed in the company which discovered gold. He worked in the gold fields long enough to fit himself to return to Utah, in a party under the command of Captain Ira J. Willes.

He arrived in Salt Lake City October 1, 1848, and was married January 1, 1849, to Matilda A. Thomas. In the fall of 1850 he came to Lehi, where a few families had already settled at Snow's Springs. He assisted in surveying the first farm lands and townsite, and in locating and digging the first irrigating ditches, including the ditch from American Fork Canyon, which was a great undertaking for that time.

In 1853 he was assigned to a four-year mission to England, which he honorably filled. On his return he had charge of one of the hand cart companies, which he brought successfully across the plains. In 1868 he went upon a second mission to the eastern states. He was one of the presidents of the 68th quorum of seventies, was Mayor of Lehi for one term, and upon several occasions was elected to the City Council. He was also appointed major in the local division of the Territorial militia.

He was ever a public-spirited man. It was largely owing to him that a bill was passed establishing the Agricultural College and he was instrumental in the location of the sugar factory at Lehi, maintaining and proving the suitability of the proposed site, in spite of discouraging conditions.

He died May 31, 1896, in Lehi, respected by all who knew him. His belief in the faith of his choice was unshaken through life, and he left behind him the unblemished record of an honest, loyal, and generous citizen.

MATILDA THOMAS EVANS.

Matilda A. Thomas Evans, daughter of Daniel S. and Martha P. Thomas, was born in Calloway County, Kentucky, Feb. 5, 1830. She was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints when eight years of age. In her youth her parents moved into Missouri, and from there into Illinois. She was in the expulsion from Nauvoo and in 1847 she, with her brother Isaac, crossed the plains in the first company of emigrants after the pioneers. They drove teams for John Van Cott in order to get an outfit to return for the rest of her father's family. They arrived in Salt Lake City on September 4, 1847. The next year, her brother returned, bringing out the family in 1849.

She was married to Israel Evans, January 1, 1849. After living in Salt Lake City for a short time they moved to Lehi, settling at Snow's Springs. Afterward they moved up on the creek into what was known as Evansville, and still later into Lehi proper. In 1853 her husband was called upon a mission to England. He left her with two small children, remaining away between four and five years. During this time she passed through all the trials incident to opening up a new country, often going into the harvest field to glean wheat to provide for herself and children. She did much toward building her first little home within the fort wall. Her entire life was a busy one, identified with the people of Lehi.

She was the mother of nine children: Mary Abigail (Mrs.

Benjamin S. Lott), Elgiva (Mrs. D. J. Thurman), Martha, Israel, Matilda (Mrs. Thomas Skalley), Morgan, Rachel (Mrs. E. J. Campbell), Lyda (Mrs. O. A. Slade), and Henry. She died March 11, 1905, a firm believer in the gospel taught by the Prophet Joseph Smith, having heard it preached from his own lips in her youth. She was a patient and willing worker all her life, always ready to give help to those in need.

DAVID EVANS, JR.

David Evans, Jr., son of Bishop David Evans and Barbara Ann Ewell Evans, was born in Lehi January 28, 1852. His early life was spent in his native city working on his father's farm in the summer and attending the district school in the winter. After reaching his majority, he taught school for a time in the Franklin School "over the creek" and, in connection with Samuel R. Thurman, commenced reading law. He went to Ann Arbor in 1884 and after his return moved to Provo, where he and Thurman conducted a law firm until 1887. As United States Deputy Marshal, Mr. Evans effected the arrest of John D. Lee and during 1887-1891, he was Assistant United States District Attorney under C. S. Varian at Provo. About this time he moved to Ogden. He was in the Utah Legislature in 1892 and an active member of the Constitutional convention in 1895.

In 1896, Mr. Evans was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago, where William Jennings Bryan received his first nomination for President of the United States. He lived in Salt Lake City for a time and moved to California about 1902, where he has been interested in some large enterprises near Los Angeles. He is now a prominent attorney in the "City of the Angels." He has been interested in mining to some extent in Utah and has been quite successful in this line.

DAVID EVANS, JR.

In 1881 he married Leah M. Nagle, a daughter of John C. and Louisa Nagle. Three daughters have been born to them, one dying in infancy,—the other two are Lucile and Irma, who are receiving a liberal education.

Although Mr. Evans has risen to fame and fortune, he has shown on many occasions that he has a tender feeling for the place of his nativity and for the friends of his youth.

CARL JOHN E. FJELD.

Carl John Ellevsen Fjeld was born January 26, 1825, in Drammen, Norway. His father, Ellev Johnson Fjeld (he was called Fjeld because of long service at Fjeldgaard, Mountain Estate, near Drammen) came from Sigdahl, Norway, and was born July 30, 1789. His mother, Anna Halvorsen, was born March, 1791, in Hillestasogn, Norway.

Carl's boyhood was spent in a ceaseless struggle for the bare necessities of life, as his parents were very poor, and although he had no schooling he became quite proficient in reading and writing. When sixteen years of age he went to sea, and spent a few years on the briny deep, much against the wishes of his mother. She finally persuaded him to give up sailing and to settle down to work and as a result he learned the trade of iron founder, at the Eidsfos Iron Works.

On the 15th of February, 1846, he took to wife Maren Eline Peterson, daughter of Peter Mortensen and Sophie Andreason, born February 5, 1822, in Hoff, Norway.

In the winter of 1852-1853 he went to Denmark, and there met the late President C. D. Fjeldsted, a fellow workman, who converted him to Mormonism. He was baptized a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints April 6, 1853, by Peter Hansen. The following May he returned to Norway, and during the summer moved his family to Christiania, where he had secured work. In the fall, Canute Peterson, whom he had met in Denmark, came to do missionary work in Norway's capital, and found a number of earnest investigators among Fjeld's companions in the foundry. A regular missionary campaign was now inaugurated, the meetings being held in Fjeld's house, and on December 8, 1853, a branch of the Church was organized with nine members. Fjeld was ordained a priest and set apart to preside. This branch has continued to the present and is one of the strongest in the lands of the north.

During the next seven years, Carl assisted the elders and took an active part in the ministry, and also endured his full share of the persecutions which the work had generally aroused. In the spring of 1860, with his family, he left his native land enroute for Utah, crossing the ocean in the good ship "William Tapscott," under the command of Captain Bell, and the plains in Captain Oscar O. Stoddard's hand cart company, arriving in Salt Lake City, September 24, 1860. The first winter was spent in Salt Lake City, and in the spring they moved to Lehi, as Fjeld had engaged to work for his friend, Canute Peterson.

It was quite a change for the iron-founder to drive an ox team while working on the farm or in the canyon, but this was the usual occupation of the pioneers of those days. On account of grasshopper wars and other wars, it was a hard struggle to get food enough for the family and the bread was often eaten bare.

On November 8, 1862, he married Anna Olson, a Swedish girl he had become acquainted with on the journey to Utah, and in 1866 he moved his first family to John C. Nagle's place, now known as Saratoga Springs, while the second family remained in Lehi. In 1870, another move was made to Pelican Point to take charge of the stage station, but the next year the route was changed through Cedar Valley, so the family moved to Eureka, where they have since resided.

In the spring of 1876, Fjeld returned to Lehi alone, where he spent the remainder of his days.

He again became active in church work, to which he was very much devoted. He was one of the active deacons and a faithful Sunday School teacher. Among the Scandinavians he was a great favorite, taking a prominent part in their meetings, and generally leading the singing. He died January 8, 1888.

Maren Eline is still living in Eureka, where she is familiarly known as Grandma "Fields," and although she is in her ninety-second year, she is hale and hearty. She had eight children, six of whom reached maturity as follows:

Anne Susannah (Mrs. John A. Hansen).

Josephine Amelia (Mrs. Wm. Montgomery).

Charles Peter.

Heber Sommund.

Sarah Maria (Mrs. Robert Harrison, deceased).

Daniel (also deceased).

ANNA OLSON FJELD.

Anna Olson Fjeld, the daughter of Andrew Olson and Christi Johanson, was born in Ostegård, Warmeland, Sweden, April 17, 1825. Her father was a tiller of the soil and a highly respected citizen of the little community and while the family did not live in luxury, by thrift and industry they were able to secure the common necessities of life.

As there were no schools in the country, the children were deprived the opportunities of book learning, but instead were taught to do all things necessary for their own sustenance and comfort. In this way Anna was taught to card, spin, knit, weave, sew, and make butter and cheese. At the age of twenty-six she went to Fredrickstad, Norway, to weave, and continued this occupation with occasional visits home in the winter for eight years. The second year of her stay in Fredrickstad she lived with the family of Emil Larson, who were Mormons, and a number of Mormon elders were also boarding there. At first she was very much prejudiced against this sect but after coming in contact with them and seeing their manner of living she began an earnest investigation, with the result that she was thoroughly convinced of the truth of the gospel as taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and in October, 1852, she was baptized by John Johanson.

In speaking of this event she says: "I felt very happy in the knowledge that I had accepted the everlasting gospel and about a month after my baptism determined to go home and tell my mother and brothers the wonderful news that the gospel which Jesus taught had been restored in our day. To my surprise and sorrow my folks became very bitter in their feelings toward me and even my dear old mother, who was rather hasty tempered, threatened to strike me with a stick for saying my prayers. My brothers, after trying in vain to convince me that I was wrong, took me to the priest but he would have nothing to do with me, so I was taken to the Provost. The Provost and I had a long discussion, but as I had studied the Bible considerably, I was able to defend myself on every point. He finally told me I had better go to the Mormons, as he was sure that I was lost. My brother, who was with me and heard the discussion, wept bitterly."

In 1860 Anna emigrated to Utah in the same company as Carl J. E. Fjeld, whom she afterward married. She came to Lehi in 1862 and immediately commenced weaving for a livelihood. Times were hard and the people were poor, but clothing being one of the absolute necessities, she was able to get sufficient employment to maintain herself and only son without being a burden to her husband. She was very devoted to her religion and lived the life of a true and faithful Latter-day Saint to the time of her death, which occurred August 5, 1903.

ANDREW FJELD.

Andrew, the youngest child of Carl J. E. Fjeld and the only child of Anna Olson Fjeld who grew to maturity, was born in Lehi, May 30, 1866. He received his education in the public schools of the city, and as a means of earning a livelihood, learned the mason trade, at which he has labored most of the time.

As a young man, he took an active part in church work, occupying the positions of counselor to Michael Vaughan, president of the priests' quorum, and later holding the office of president of the quorum with Andrew Peterson and Walter Webb as counselors.

In the Y. M. M. I. A. he at various times held the office of treasurer, counselor to Abel

John Evans, and president of the association.

He was a teacher in the Sunday School for some time and on January 9, 1893, became a member of the first class to take the Sunday School course in the B. Y. University at Provo, which consisted of five weeks. The following year the course was extended to twenty weeks, when he was again called to attend the University. On his return he introduced the new ideas and methods into the Sunday School

Joseph S. Broadbent as assistants.

Being called to Australia on a mission, he was released from the Sunday School January 9, 1899, and set sail from San Francisco on the 26th of the month, landing in Sydney, Australia, February 19, 1899. He labored as traveling elder in the New South Wales Conference for thirteen months and as president of the Queensland Conference until November 28, 1900, when he was called by President Lorenzo Snow to preside over the Australian Mission. In this capacity he visited all the principal cities of Australia and Tasmania and was relieved by James Duckworth, who had come to preside over the mission, August 4, 1901.

He set sail from Sydney, Australia, on the steamship Ventura, August 13, 1901, calling en route at Auckland, Pago Pago, and Honolulu, landing in San Francisco, where he was met by his wife and her father and mother September 3, 1901, arriving in Lehi on the thirteenth of the month.

He was ordained a president of seventy in the 68th quorum September 21, 1902, and on the 23rd of the following November was set apart as Second Counselor to Bishop Thomas R. Cutler. Upon the division of the Lehi Ward December 20, 1903, he was ordained a bishop and set apart to preside over the First Ward with and was called November 18, 1894, to succeed William Yates as the superintendent of the school, with James Kirkham and Robert John Whipple and George Schow as counselors, which position he still holds.

He was a member of the School Board for one term, is a member of the Lehi Pioneer Committee and one of the promoters of the History of Lehi.

On the 19th of February, 1890, he married Eliza Ann Broadbent, a daughter of Joseph and Sarah Dixon Broadbent, born August 17, 1870. When family cares will permit, she delights in attending to church duties and for some years was an active Relief Society teacher. She is the mother of nine children, seven of whom are living, as follows: Virgil Andrew, Wilford Carl, Leona Sarah, Edna Amanda, June, Allan Edward, and Velma.

WM. FOTHERINGHAM.

William Fotheringham, a patriarch and a veteran elder in the Church, was born April 5, 1826, at Clackmannan, Scotland, the son of John Fotheringham and Charlotte Gentle. He was baptized in the fall of 1847 by Elder John Sharp, ordained a teacher March 19, 1848, by Elder William Gibson; ordained a seventy in the winter of 1849-1850, by Joseph Young; ordained a high priest December 3, 1870, by Jehu Blackburn; ordained a bishop, in 1877, by Apostle Erastus Snow, to act as bishop's agent in Beaver stake; and ordained a patriarch January 22, 1905, by Francis M. Lyman.

He was one of the first settlers of Lehi, Utah County, locating there in 1850, and in the spring of 1852 he accompanied President Brigham Young on an exploring tour through Utah, Juab, Sanpete, Millard, Beaver, and Iron Counties. In 1852-1855 he filled a mission to India, during which time he traveled more extensively than any other elder who has ever performed missionary labor for the church in that country. He traveled 2,200 miles in a bullock wagon, and went as far inland as the Himalaya mountains. In the province of Orissa he resided six months close to the Temple of Juggernaut. After his return to Utah he accompanied President Brigham Young on an exploring expedition to Salmon River (now in Idaho), and the following winter participated in the Echo Canyon campaign.

In the spring of 1861 he left Salt Lake City for his second mission, this time to South Africa. In crossing the plains he assisted Captain Ira Eldredge in taking charge of fifty wagons to the Missouri River, and was ninety-nine days making the voyage from London, England, to Capetown, South Africa. He presided over the mission until 1864, when he returned to Utah. At the Missouri River he assisted in the immigration of the Saints and acted as assistant captain to Warren S. Snow in leading the last company of the season (84 wagons) to Zion. The trip was a severe one, as nearly all the teamsters were inexperienced in handling oxen.

Since Elder Fotheringham became a member of the church, he has proven to be true and faithful to the cause of Christ. Over forty years of his life he spent as a zealous Sunday School worker, with the exception of a few months, being Sunday School superintendent forty years. He labored considerably as a home missionary, and filled a mission to the St. George Temple from the Beaver Stake as an ordinance worker for four years, and in addition acted as a member of the high council, and as first counselor in the presidency of the Beaver stake.

Of civil offices he has held quite a number, having acted as alderman of Lehi City, mayor of Beaver City, probate clerk of Beaver County for sixteen years, a justice of the peace of Beaver precinct, and has been a member of the Utah Territorial Legislature from Beaver and adjacent counties. In his youth he learned the trade of ship carpenter, and after his arrival in Utah he helped to build the old tithing office in Salt Lake City, together with other buildings.

He married his first wife in April, 1856, a second wife May 25, 1857, and a third wife October 10, 1865. By these three wives he has had thirty children, eighteen sons and twelve daughters. Elder Fotheringham departed this life on February 27, 1913, having proved himself staunch and true to his God, to his family, to his friends, and left behind memories worthy to cherish.

JAMES H. GARDNER.

One of the chief reasons why Utah has today so many men of initiative and ability to lead is that by force of circumstances they were early thrown on their own resources and compelled by an unkind fortune to develop that supremely valuable quality—self-reliance. Responsibility is an effective teacher and the responsibility of shifting for one's self quickly brings into being any valuable attributes of character hitherto lurking under the surface.

When James Hamilton Gardner was born, on July 27, 1859, at Mill Creek, Salt Lake County, Utah, he was thrown into conditions which, while seemingly hard, were only those common to the times, and which have been so productive of the best types of Utah manhood. His father, Archibald Gardner, a pioneer of 1847, and that time Bishop of the West Jordan Ward, was that kind of man Brigham Young liked to have around him—a natural leader of men, resourceful, energetic, able to cope with new conditions, and a developer of new enterprises. His work left him little time to spend with his children, so that James H. was compelled to depend largely upon himself, living alternately with his mother, Sarah Hamilton Gardner, and his grandfather, James L. Hamilton.

Like most others of that period, he had little opportunity for education, his entire school life consisting of six winters in the grades. The rest of the time was spent working on the farm and, when he had reached young manhood, in the lumber camps.

In 1880, when James H. was 21 years old, he accepted a call for a mission to Hawaii. Here in the "garden spot of the world" he spent the next three and one-half years, and here it was also that perhaps the turning point of his life occurred. Arriving on the island just when the sugar boiler on the church plantation was about to return home, he was assigned to work in the cane sugar mill, much to his regret—then. While here he became a thorough master of the art of boiling sugar, although most of his time was spent in traveling among the natives.

In 1884 he returned to Utah and again took up his work on the farm, obtaining employment wherever possible. On October 15, 1886, he was married to Rhoda Priscilla Huffaker. From this union have come nine children, four boys and five girls.

Shortly after their marriage, James H. and his wife decided to take advantage of the available government lands in Idaho, so leaving their old home in Utah, they homesteaded a quarter section of land at Willow Creek (now Elva), near Idaho Falls. The struggle to subdue this new country was a severe one, requiring to its fullest the pioneer spirit of perseverance and determination. He had no more than brought the land into some stage of cultivation than other events occurred which altered the course of his life completely.

In 1890 the Lehi sugar factory was built and immediately there arose the necessity of obtaining workmen to run it, and especially men of some experience in the industry. Among other applications received was one from James H. Gardner of Idaho, who stated that he had previously boiled sugar in Hawaii. He was at once told to report at Lehi, a summons which he gladly followed, and during the first campaign was one of the sugar boilers. In 1892 he moved his family to Lehi, where they have since resided.

From its beginning until the present, James H. Gardner has been a faithful employee of the Utah Sugar Company. After the first campaign, he was made night foreman and, in a few years, general foreman. Finally, when Hy A. Vallez resigned from the position, he was designated superintendent of the Lehi factory. Since that time he has received still another promotion, having been made General Consulting Superintendent. He still holds this position and in addition is a member of the Technical Board which controls the operation of the plants. His record as a sugar maker is an enviable one. His long experience, his ability to handle men, his excellent judgment have won him not only the confidence of the sugar company which employs him, but also a professional reputation in other states—a reputation which has brought him several lucrative offers from other companies in various parts of the United States. But he has preferred to remain in his native Commonwealth.

Since his residence in Lehi, James H. has given a large part of his time and talents to the work of public service. Interested in the development and betterment of the city, he has endeavored to aid every worthy movement to the extent of his power. He has served the people in the City Council one term and also as a Commissioner of Utah County. Profoundly interested in education, he was at one time a member of the School Board and has ever been an earnest supporter of Lehi's schools. He was one of the prime movers in the organization of the Commercial Club and has since been its president.

His public work has also taken the form of helping to establish new enterprises in Lehi. His first venture in this line was that of a director in the Lehi Mercantile Company — now closed. He was also one of the originators of the Lehi Roller Mills and the State Bank of Lehi, being still a director of the latter institution and of the Bank of American Fork. Of late years he has developed a large section of land west of the Jordan River, in dry-farming, fruit-raising, and stock-raising.

In 1903, when the Lehi Ward was divided, James H. Gardner was chosen Bishop of the Second Ward, a position which he still holds.

RHODA P. H. GARDNER.

Simpson D. Huffaker was a pioneer of 1847 who lived with his wife, Rhoda P. Barnum, in South Cottonwood, Salt Lake County. To them was born December 30, 1865, a daughter, whom they named Rhoda Priscilla. Her mother soon dying, Rhoda was given to the care of Lauretta Palmer Barnum, her grandmother. With this good woman she spent her girlhood and young womanhood in Peoa, Summit County, Utah. Here she received a common school education and later worked a number of years in the Peoa Co-op.

On October 15, 1886, Rhoda was married to James H. Gardner in Logan. For one year they made their home in Salt Lake County and then braved a new country in Idaho. With her husband she helped to bring under cultivation the quarter section of government land upon which he had filed, undergoing all the hardships and inconveniences incident to a pioneer country.

In 1892 the family moved to Lehi, which has since been their home. Mrs. Gardner has here reared a family of nine children, which alone is sufficient to show that her life has been a busy one.

But outside of her family cares she has found time to participate in the various activities of her sex. In Idaho she was secretary of the Relief Society and first counselor in the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Association. When the Lehi Second Ward was formed, she was made second counselor in the Relief Society, a position she still holds.

WILLIAM GOATES.

William Goates, born at Wimpole, Cambridgeshire, England, May 11, 1817, was the son of James Goates and Ann Dockery.

He spent his boyhood days working with his father, who was a professional gardener. The beauties of nature soon appealed to him, and he loved the trees and flowers and soon became an expert in their care and cultivation. He was baptized and confirmed a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints December, 1840, by Elder William Pierce and was sent the same day to Cambridge to preach. By his undaunted faith and zealous labors he was successful in establishing the first branch of the church at Cambridge, under the direction of the Bedford conference president, over which he was appointed to preside. Through his earnest labors and untiring efforts, Cambridgeshire afterwards became a conference.

In 1840 he married Susan Larkin; a daughter of Thomas Larkin and Ann Rayner. They always made their home a home for the elders; and bade them welcome there. He emigrated to Utah, sailing from Liverpool, England, Tuesday, February 10, 1852, with his wife and three children in the ship "Ellen Maria," with a company of 369 Saints. After eight weeks at sea they arrived at New Orleans. They then went to Saint Louis en route to Utah, crossing the plains in Captain A. O. Smoot's company of 31 wagons, and arriving in Salt Lake City September 3, 1852. About two weeks later he settled in Lehi with his family, consisting of his wife, Susan, and daughters, Sarah Ann, Martha, and son Joseph W., his daughter Mary having died before they left their home in England. In April, 1857, he married a plural wife, Rebecca Pilgrim, daughter of Samuel Pilgrim and Betsy Coote, a survivor of Captain Willie's hand cart company of 1856.

His early life in Lehi was a struggle with the sterile soil. He acquired land by homestead and purchase and his busy hands began to build and to cultivate. He became extensively engaged in farming and stock raising, and was one of the first to import bees into Lehi. Hereafter he was long engaged in the bee and honey industry. He loved the flowers and trees and was the pioneer floriculturist and nurseryman of the town, his trees and flowers being shipped to many parts of the country.

The industrial matters of the people always interested him and he was an ardent advocate of their enterprises, helping and encouraging them whenever he found an opportunity to assist. In 1867 he wife, Susan, died, and was buried in Lehi. She had stood faithfully by him in all the trials of pioneer life, encouraging and helping him in all that he undertook to do. She never complained, but was his source of comfort and encouragement, and contributed much to his success. "He was a man of unblemished character. His sterling honesty was proverbial, his faith immovable and his self-control truly astonishing."

He was always active and faithful in church matters, and honorably filled the positions mentioned below: President of the first elders' quorum in Lehi; he was ordained a high priest and set apart as first counselor to Bishop Evans April 4, 1877, and was afterwards appointed to preside over the Lehi branch of the high priests' quorum in the Utah Stake of Zion. He was elected City Councilman of Lehi

City February 8, 1875, and served during the years 1875-1876. He was a public-spirited man and passed cheerfully through all the hardships and privations of the early settlers. He was a builder in very deed, his busy hands leaving many traces of their work both on the farm, in the garden, and in the orchard.

He did special guard duty against the depredations of the Indians, helped build the "Old Fort Wall," and assisted in the early irrigation projects and road building.

His unflinching devotion to that which he believed to be right and just won for him a host of friends who were always welcomed to his home. Here he spent his declining years engaged in the life-loved work of his boyhood days, enjoying the labor of his own hands in his well cultivated garden of flowers and trees. He died Wednesday at 5:50 p. m., October 23, 1895, of general debility. Beloved by all, he passed to the world beyond with the honors of a busy, well spent life upon him.

He was the father of the following children: Mary, Sarah Ann, Martha, Joseph W., James T., John, William, and George H. His descendants number 408 souls. George A. Goates

REBECCA PILGRIM GOATES.

Rebecca Pilgrim Goates, daughter of Samuel Pilgrim and Betsy

Coote, was born at William Read's Farm, Madingly Road, Jiles Parish, Cambridge, England, January 1, 1826.

When she was sixteen years of age her father died, leaving her mother with eight children. Being the oldest girl, she aided very materially in supporting the family.

In 1853 she joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. This brought upon her much opposition from her family and friends, but she was undaunted and fearless in her convictions and though persecuted and scorned, she remained faithful and true. In 1856 on the fourth day of May, she left her native home and friends and emigrated to Utah, sailing on the ship "Thornton" with a company in care of Elder Levi Savage, arriving at New York June 14, 1856.

She joined Captain James G. Willie's hand cart company, numbering about five hundred, which left Iowa City July 15, 1856, with 120 hand carts and six wagons. She pulled a hand cart 1,400 miles through valleys and over the plains and mountains. The terrible privations of her company and the sufferings they endured during the trip are a matter of record.

A recital of the sad story of the hand cart company disaster always filled her heart with pride and thanksgiving at the thoughts that she had passed through such hardships for the cause which she embraced and loved so much. She arrived at Salt Lake City, November 9, 1856, after great suffering from scarcity of provisions, cold, and over exertion in the mountains, many of the company having perished during the trip. She remained in Salt Lake City about one week and then came to Lehi.

In April, 1857, she married William Goates. The remainder of her life was lovingly devoted to assisting him in all he undertook to do. She took the place of a mother and cared for his motherless children; she was devoted and faithful, and although she never became a mother, she was indeed a mother to the motherless. She was kind, sympathetic and generous, always ready to aid those in need, and was ever busy looking after the welfare of others. She possessed a remarkably strong constitution, which took considerable time to wear away, but was finally called to a well earned rest, after having been confined to her bed two weeks, suffering of general debility. She passed peacefully to the Great Beyond, at 12:30 a. m., April 18, 1909. Her honored career was closed in full faith and fellowship in the cause for which she so long had suffered, at the age of 83 years, 3 months, and 17 days.

ISAAC GOODWIN.

Isaac Goodwin, a descendant of Ozias Goodwin, who came to America from England and settled in Connecticut in 1632, was born June 18, 1810, in New Hartford, Litchfield County, Connecticut. He married Laura Hotchkiss February 2, 1833, from which union seven children were born, four boys and three girls: Isaac, Lewis, Edwin A., Albert S., Emmerett E. (Coons), Nancy (Evans), and Lucinda (Bushman).

Isaac Goodwin and family embraced the faith of the Latter-day Saints in the year 1844. Two years later in company with other Saints they concluded to go west and took passage at New York on the sailing vessel "Brooklyn," her destination being California. Leaving New York on February 4, 1846, they sailed around Cape Horn at the southern extremity of South America, which point they passed in the latter part of April, finally landing at San Francisco on July 24, 1846, the voyage consuming a little less than six months.

At the beginning of the voyage, Mrs. Goodwin met with an accident and being in delicate health, never recovered from the shock, passing away on May 6, 1846, shortly after the ship had rounded Cape Horn. She was buried on Goat Island, one of the Juan Fernandez Group, (Robinson Crusoe's famed islands).

Isaac Goodwin and children lived for some time at San Francisco and later moved to San Bernardino, where he met and married on December 22, 1855, Mary Cox of New Haven, England, who received the gospel on January 10, 1850, and emigrated to America, coming overland to Utah with Charles C. Rich's company and then going on to California. No children were born of this union. Mary Cox Goodwin died December 13, 1898, at Lehi, Utah.

After living at San Bernardino for several years, they decided to move to Utah, traveling the southern route, making a short stay in "Dixie," also in one or two other places, and finally settling in Lehi in 1859.

Isaac Goodwin was the first to introduce alfalfa (lucern) in Utah, the hay from which has been such an important factor in the agriculture of this State.

He was elected mayor of Lehi City on February 13, 1865; was appointed mayor on October 31, 1874, to fill the vacancy made by William H. Winn, who resigned; was again elected mayor on February 8, 1875; and filled the office with honor and fidelity on each occasion.

He held many other positions of trust, both secular and religious. In 1872 he went on a mission to the Eastern States. Isaac ber, Wayne County, Utah, April 6, 1891, a faithful member of the L. D. S. Church. He is survived by his wife and four sons and many grandchildren, in addition to two great-grandsons. He moved to Smithfield, Cache Valley, in 1862, and was a pioneer there for fourteen years. He then moved south to Escalante in 1876, again a pioneer. The next move was to Thurber in 1883, where he died in 1891. He was a good frontiersman, building his own houses, and working his own farm and garden.

BETSY SMITH GOODWIN.

Betsy Smith Goodwin was born on March 7, 1843, at Dundee, Scotland, the daughter of Alexander Nichol Smith and May McEwan Smith. She emigrated with her widowed mother and family in 1856, crossing the plains with J. G. Willie's hand cart company. Robert Angus Bain, also a Lehi pioneer, son and brother, met the family at Green river, and brought them to Lehi, arriving November 11. In Lehi they received kindness and sympathy from Bishop Evans and the good people of the city. Betsy married Isaac H. Goodwin, eldest son of Isaac R. and Laura Hotchkiss Goodwin, on December 1, 1859. Nine children, seven sons and two daughters, blessed their home. She was president of the Relief Society eight years.

JAMES GOUGH.

James Gough was born January 14, 1840, in Clifford, Herefordshire, England. He was the second child and oldest son of James Gough and Ellenor Jones Gough. When he was seven years old, his parents moved to Monmouthshire, Wales.

He was baptized a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints November 19, 1857, by Thomas Morgan and confirmed by David Howells. He was ordained to all the offices in the Aaronic priesthood and later sent out as a traveling elder, which lasted for one year and seven months, after which he was called to preside over the Bryn Mawr Branch. Mr. Gough left Wales for Utah April 26, 1862, and was five weeks and three days on the sea. He walked all the way from Florence across the plains to Salt Lake City in Captain Harmon's company, where he arrived October 4, 1862, taking six months to make the journey. He was met in Salt Lake City a few days after his arrival by his old friend Joseph J. H. Colledge, who had presided over the conference in which Gough had labored as traveling elder. With his old friend he came to Lehi.

On October 17, 1863, he married Charlotte Crocket, to whom he had been engaged in England. She came to Utah in October, 1863. They have lived in Lehi continuously, Mr. Gough working in the mines, on the railroad, and at farming.

Mr. Gough's public work has been in the church, to which he has always been very devoted. At the time of his departure for Utah, a number of the Saints of the branch over which he presided also emigrated to Zion. These looked to him as their leader during the entire journey. Since coming to Utah, he has held the positions of seventy and high priest. He has been a Sunday School teacher almost all the time and also a block teacher, which position he still holds.

Mr. Gough moved "over the creek" in 1868, being the first one to locate in that district and has been one of the main pillars of the church in this part of the community.

CHARLOTTE CROCKET GOUGH.

Charlotte C. Gough was the daughter of William and Ann

Williams Crocket and was born April 25, 1840, in Victoria, Monmouthshire, Wales. She joined the church in 1857. She is the mother of eleven children, as follows: Mary Ann (Mrs. Soren Sorensen), Lavina (Mrs. Moroni Thayne), James Charles, Ellen (Mrs. James Carter), William, Richard, Harriett (Mrs. Thomas Taylor), Samuel, Thomas Ephraim, Charlotte (Mrs. William Hadfield), and Robert.

CHARLOTTE C. GOUGH.

WILLIAM GURNEY.

William Gurney was born in Bedfordshire, England, August 8, 1834, the son of John and Mary Bales Gurney. His mother died when he was ten years of age. He was then taken care of by a loving sister. At the age of fifteen he first heard the gospel of Jesus Christ and soon accepted the same and was baptized March 1, 1853, by Daniel Mathews.

He emigrated from England April 8, 1854, on the ship "Marshfield," landing at New Orleans May 28, 1854, and continuing his journey up the Mississippi River to St. Louis. There was much sickness among the Saints, which caused considerable delay, but he finally reached Salt Lake City October 22, 1854, where he remained for some time.

He came to Lehi in the spring of 1855. After remaining in Lehi about four years, he became acquainted with Miss Julia Jeans, whom he married, and to them were born eleven children to gladden their home.

He was a valiant worker in the cause of truth, at all times laboring in the Sabbath School from its earliest organization until the time of his death. He worked in connection with William Yates in the acting teachers' quorum for many years, and was its president at the time of his death; he was also one of the senior presidents of the Sixty-eighth quorum of seventies, where he gained the love and respect of his brethren.

He died March 25, 1905, after a long and useful life.

He was the husband of three wives; and the father of nineteen children. He has in the year 1913, 67 living descendants: 11 children, 44 grandchildren, 14 great-grandchildren; 8 children, 10 grandchildren, and 4 great-grandchildren having passed to the Great Beyond.

WILLIAM HADFIELD.

William Hadfield, second son and third child of Samuel Hadfield and Alice Baker, was born at Provo, Utah, June 3, 1880, where he resided until 1889. Being left an orphan, he came to live in Lehi in December, 1889, with T. R. Jones. He was baptized in 1890 by A. M. Fox, ordained a deacon by W. W. Clark, and ordained an elder by Edward Southwick in June, 1902. He filled a mission to the Eastern States from October, 1902, to December, 1904, and was president of the New York conference for five months. He was superintendent of the Third Ward Sunday School from 1904 to 1910, when he was chosen second counselor in the Bishopric of Lehi Third Ward. He was ordained a seventy by J. G. Kimball in 1906. He married Charlotte Gough June 28, 1905, in the Salt Lake Temple. Mr. Hadfield was the first and only Mormon to represent Utah at the national convention of mail carriers September 16 to 19, 1913, at Evansville, Indiana.

HANS HAMMER.

Hans Hammer was born in Bornholm, Denmark, October 11, 1829, and is the son of Hans and Ane Anderson Hammer. He grew to manhood in his native place and there received his education and was married.

In 1853 he became converted to the teachings of the Mormon Church and with his family emigrated to America, reaching Salt Lake City in 1854, and there made his home for the next five years, working part of the time on the Temple and doing anything he could find to make a living for himself and family. He moved to Lehi in 1858, taking up a farm and has since made this place his home.

For a number of years he was engaged in peddling, mostly among the soldiers; he also conducted a small store for a time.

In 1871 he commenced the livery business, being the pioneer livery man of Lehi. He also went into the hotel business on a small scale, all of which he conducted with success. The livery business has continued to grow from year to year, and at present it is the leading livery stable of the town.

Mr. Hammer was married in his native land in 1853 to Miss Julane Marie Reese, who bore him eight children, three of whom are now living—George, Margaret (Mrs. Edward F. Cox), and Aldora (Mrs. Henry Ashton). The mother of these children died March 28, 1867, and on the 26th of the following October Mr. Hammer married Miss Anne Christine Orego, by whom he had seven children of whom Joseph is the only one living.

Mr. Hammer was an industrious citizen and in common with the pioneers of Lehi passed through the hard times of early days and lived to become a thriving business man of the community. He died September 15, 1905.

ANNE CHRISTINE OREGO
HAMMER.

Mrs. Hammer, the wife of Hans Hammer, was born August 6, 1839, in Puerdal, Denmark. Her parents, Christian Larsen Orego and Marie Petersen, were farmer folk living on the shore of the North Sea. At the age of six she lost her father. On the 17th of January, 1864,

ANNA C. O. HAMMER.

she was baptized a member of the Mormon Church, two years later emigrating to America, arriving in Utah September, 1866. Mrs. Hammer was a young woman of twenty-seven years of age when she crossed the plains and she walked the entire distance from Omaha City to West Weber, where she stayed for six months with William Cluff. During the summer of 1867 she was working in Salt Lake City for a family of Jews. While here some of her friends in Lehi prevailed on Mr. Hammer, who was a widower, to call on her, which he did with the result that she was persuaded to make Lehi her future home, being married to Mr. Hammer October 26, 1867.

At this time Mr. Hammer had a family of small children, times were hard and pioneer conditions prevailed, yet the subject of our sketch set bravely to work to make conditions better and help her husband rear his family. In time seven children blessed this union, but sad to relate only one is now living, Joseph, who with George, the son of the first wife, is conducting the business left them by their father.

Mrs. Hammer has ever been an industrious and faithful wife and mother, a good neighbor, and a devoted Latter-day Saint. For thirty-two years she has been an active Relief Society teacher and is still engaged in the work.

JENS N. HOLM AND FAMILY.

In Arnager, a small fishermen's village five miles from the city of Ronne on the Island of Bornholm, Denmark, were born Jens Neilson Holm and his wife, Margaret Christina Ipson Holm. They were married April 30, 1842. To this union was given one daughter, Margaret Christina, born September 5, 1843. They joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints February 4, 1854, emigrating to Utah in 1857. Nine weeks and three days were spent on the ocean voyage and fourteen weeks in crossing the plains from Omaha to Salt Lake City, arriving in Utah September 13, 1857. The hand cart company of which they were members paralleled, in their travels, the advance wagons of Johnston's Army.

Father Holm and family spent the first winter in Brigham City. In the spring of 1858 he was called south. Upon reaching Payson he was ordered back, locating in Lehi July 4, 1858. Here the members of this family made their home continuously up to the time of their death.

Jens Neilson Holm was born March 23, 1818, and died in Lehi April 22, 1908, at the age of 90 years and one month.

Margaret Christina Ipson Holm was born August 14, 1817, and died in Lehi January 28, 1896, at the age of 78 years, 5 months, and 14 days.

Margaret Christina Holm Evans was born September 5, 1843. She was married to Bishop David Evans May 4, 1861. She became the mother of six children, one son and five daughters.

Her children are John Holm, died in infancy; Margaret Christine (Mrs. James J. Turner), MARGARET C. HOLM EVANS.

Jane (Mrs. Richard W. Bradshaw), Hannah (Mrs. Andrew B. Anderson), Rachel (Mrs. John W. Wing, Jr.), Clara (Mrs. Joseph Goates, Jr.)

She died June 17, 1898, at the age of 54 years, 10 months, and 12 days.

M. W. INGALLS.

Merrell Whittier Ingalls was born in the state of Maine, and removed to the state of Illinois when a small boy and to California in 1864. He was employed by his father, who had a contract for the erection of a plant for the California Beet Sugar Company at Alvarado, California, in the year 1869. This plant was the first beet sugar factory in America, but was a few years later moved to Soquel, near Santa Cruz, California, where the writer with his brother was sub-contractor on part of the work. He then followed surveying and was also on the engineering corps, surveying proposed routes for pipe lines to supply San Francisco with water.

In 1879 he removed machinery from the factory in Sacramento, California, to Alvarado, for the Standard Sugar Company. He was employed by this company for six or eight years, first as mechanic and then as master mechanic and Chief Engineer. On account of ill health, he went to Arizona and installed an electric light plant in the penitentiary at Yuma, then operated a lumber mill and electric light plant at Portland, Oregon.

Coming to Utah in 1891 as master mechanic for the company which was building a factory for the Utah Sugar Company, he made a one year's contract with them. Then he made a three year's contract with the Utah Sugar Company, and has been with the Utah-Idaho Sugar Company, their successors, up to the present time, from 1902 to 1907 as Chief Engineer of all plants connected with Utah-Idaho sugar Company, and from that time until the present as Consulting Engineer with the Technical Board. In the year 1901 the farmers that were raising beets in Salt Lake County would not raise them to the extent desired by the sugar company, on account of shortage of water, so in company with James H. Gardner, he contracted for and installed a pumping plant at the mouth of the Jordan River for the different canal companies.

MARY JOYNSON JACKSON.

Mary J. Jackson, a daughter of Thomas and Mary Clay Joynson, was born August 30, 1819, in Barra, Cheshire, England. Her parents were farmer folk, so she grew up surrounded by the scenes of country life. Her opportunities being limited, her education was very meagre, although she was able to read.

In 1836 she married John Jackson, a young man of almost her own age. He was born March 17, 1819, in her native village. His father, John Jackson, was a street paver, while John, Jr., became a carpenter.

In 1841 this young couple joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, being among the first to accept the gospel in England. For twenty-seven years Mr. Jackson and wife kept open house for the Mormon elders and many there were who came and went as the years rolled by.

One June 4, 1868, John and Mary and seven children emigrated to America, leaving their two older sons, who were married, in England. They crossed the ocean on the sailing vessel "John Bright," landing in New York July 13, 1868; crossed the plains in Captain John R. Murdock's company and arrived in Salt Lake City, Utah, August 30, 1868. Bishop Evans of Lehi, who was present when the company arrived, made enquiry concerning tradesmen and on learning that Mr. Jackson was a carpenter, asked permission of Presiding Bishop Hunter, who had charge of the immigration business, if he might take him to MARY J. JACKSON.

Lehi. Bishop Hunter replied in his characteristic way, "Yes, yes, take him along, lock, stock, and barrel," and that is how it happened that the family came to Lehi.

The names of the children who came at this time were: Enos, Hyrum, Joseph, Mary Rebecca (Mrs. Moroni Holt), Daniel, Harriett (Mrs. James Brooks), Sarah (Mrs. Henry McComie), Ephraim, and Moses. John and Henry came to Utah some years later.

For a number of years Mr. Jackson followed the carpenter trade, but the change in climate seemed to break his health. Like all pioneers, he had to turn his hand to various occupations among which was cutting and hauling cedar posts to Salt Lake City. On the 5th of January, 1870, while returning from Salt Lake City, where he had been with a load of posts, he was accidentally thrown from the wagon by the dropping of the wheel in a hole in the road and in falling, his head was caught in the wheel and his neck broken. About two years later, the widow married John Shaw, with whom she lived until the time of his death, which occurred in 1881.

Mother Jackson, as she was familiarly known, lived to a ripe old age, loved and respected by all who knew her for her happy, cheerful disposition. She died December 21, 1906.

JOHN JOHNSON.

John Johnson was one of the very early pioneers and prominent citizens "over the creek." A native of Warceland, Sweden, he was born December 15, 1821, and with his wife and four children emigrated to Utah in 1862. He joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Norway, where he lived for a number of years, being baptized by Karl Dorius, and took an active part in missionary work in the neighborhood where he lived. On reaching Utah, he came direct to Lehi, where he has since made his home. In 1865 his wife Gorinna Torgersen died, leaving him with the care of five children, the youngest having been born in Lehi. Their names are: Anna (Mrs. George Beck), Willard, Parley, Charles, and Melvin.

In 1867 he married Anna Anderson, a native of Morra, Sweden, born 1828, who soon adapted herself to the pioneer conditions of the Johnson family and became a kind and affectionate mother to the children and a devoted wife and helpmate to Mr. Johnson. Besides being a good housekeeper, she was an expert worker in hair, making very beautiful necklaces, watch chains, and the like, of this material.

During his residence in Lehi, Mr. Johnson has followed the occupation of farming and during the latter years of his life was able to live in comparative comfort and enjoy the fruits of his toil and industry.

He died May 5, 1913, survived by his wife Anna and four sons.

ELLEN W. JONES.

Ellen Williams Jones was born December 1, 1839, in Slansantfraid, Denbigh County, Wales. She was the daughter of Emma Fowlks and William Williams. She was married to Thomas R. Jones December 28, 1854. She arrived in Lehi in 1861 and lived in a cellar one winter, then built an adobe house outside of the fort wall. After living a number of years there, they moved to the North Branch.

ELLEN W. JONES.

Mrs. Jones was present at the first organization of the Relief Society in Lehi and was called to act as president of the Lehi North Branch Relief Society in 1877, serving for thirty-five years. In addition she was chosen first counselor of the Primary Association, and served about twenty-five years. She was called to work among the sick and in laying away the dead, for which many scores are here to bless her for her assistance in time of death and sickness.

THOMAS KARREN.

Thomas Karren was born on the Isle of Man, May 1, 1810, moved to Liverpool, England, in 1830, and joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in 1842. He was ordained an elder at Liverpool, emigrated to Nauvoo, Illinois in 1844, and was ordained a seventy in the Seventh quorum at Nauvoo. He joined the Mormon Battalion in 1846 and was honorably discharged in 1847, landing in Great Salt Lake Valley July 23 of the same year.

He went back to Council Bluffs and returned to Utah with his family in 1850. In 1852 he was called to the Sandwich Islands upon a mission, where he was associated with George Q. Cannon and others. He returned to Lehi in 1855. Later he was ordained first counselor to Bishop Evans, which position he retained to the day of his death. For two years before his death he suffered extremely.

He was a faithful Latter-day Saint, highly esteemed by all who knew him. Throughout all his affliction he did not complain but resigned himself to the will of God. He left three wives and thirteen children living to mourn his loss.

JOHN KARREN.

John Karren was born July 4, 1834, at Liverpool, England. His father, Thomas Karren, was a native of the Isle of Man and his mother's name was Ann Rat-ley. The family were converted to the faith advocated by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and emigrated to America and cast their lot with the Mormon people.

The father joined the famous Mormon Battalion and left the family to shift for themselves under very trying circumstances.

After his return, the family crossed the plains to Utah in 1850 and located at Sulphur Springs on Dry Creek, being among the first families to settle on the site of Lehi.

John grew up amid the rugged scenes of pioneer life and conditions and took part in many of the hazardous undertakings of the early days. He was in the battle with the Indians during the Tintic War in 1856 when Catlin, Cousin, and Winn were killed. He made a trip back to the Missouri River after the Church immigration in 1865 and was a veteran of the Black Hawk Indian war. He died March 19, 1904.

MARIA LAWRENCE KARREN.

Maria Lawrence Karren, wife of John Karren, was a daughter of John and Rhoda Lawrence, and was born May 24, 1836, in Toronto, Canada. Her father died at Winter Quarters in 1846, and a sister died at about the same time. The entire family except Maria were sick and she was the only one able to render any aid to the others. The family moved to Utah and she was married to John Karren in 1854. She was the mother of twelve children, six of them growing to maturity. They were: John Daniel, Edward, Rosabell (Mrs. John D. Woodhouse), Flora

(Mrs. Heber McNeil, deceased), William, Josephus, and Katie

GEORGE WILLIAM KIRKHAM.

George William Kirkham was born March 18, 1822, in London, Surrey, England, and died at Lehi, Utah, April 24, 1896.

Mary Astington Kirkham was born July 6, 1824, in Richmond, Yorkshire, England. She died at Lehi, Utah, October 27, 1881.

They left their native land April 11, 1859, and with their four sons, James, George, Hyrum, and Joseph, crossed the ocean in the sailing vessel, "William Tabscot." They crossed the plains in R. F. Neslen's company, arriving in Salt Lake City, Thursday, September 15, 1859. They lived in Sugar House Ward, Salt Lake City, during the winter of 1859 and came to Lehi in the spring of 1860, where they spent their lives in helping to build up our city, making roads, building fences, assisting in rearing our public buildings, and otherwise passing through the trials of pioneer life and the hardships of the early days of Utah.

THORSTEN KNUDSEN.

Thorsten Knudsen was born February 20, 1835, in Sorknes, Grue, Soler, Norway being a son of Knud Knudsen and Tore Gulbrandsen. His father, who had been a well-to-do land owner, lost all of his property in speculations and when Mr. Knudsen was four years old his father died and he was sent to live with an aunt.

THORSTEN KNUDSEN.

When he was 16, his mother died also. There were ten children in the family, and Thorsten was the youngest. He lived with his aunt till he was about 12 years old, when he went home to live with his mother. After her death, he lived with various ones to whom he hired out to work, as the custom was to hire out for a year.

At the age of 20 he went to Christiania, the capital of Norway, and four years later he married Ogene Hergesen, the orphaned daughter of Hans and Ingaborg Hergesen.

In 1860 he joined the Mormon Church, having come in contact with the elders through the persuasions of his affianced. In 1866 he became very ill and as the doctor advised a change of climate he decided to emigrate to America. He shipped from Hamburg in the sailing vessel "Humbolt," taking nine weeks to cross the ocean. He crossed the plains in Captain Scott's company, arriving in Salt Lake City during the October conference.

Mr. Knudsen went to Provo, where he lived till the 22nd of December, 1866, when he came to Lehi and has lived here ever since. When Knudsen left his wife in Norway he also left his son Parley, who was 5 years old. Two years later through the death of a child whose fare had been paid, Parley was brought to Utah by C. C. A. Christensen, a returning missionary. In 1870 Mrs. Knudsen emigrated to Utah and joined her husband and son in Lehi. Three children have been born to this family since their arrival in Lehi, but only one, Hyrum, is living. His home is in Logan. The wife and mother died November 13, 1910.

In 1871 the Knudsen family moved to their present home over the creek, being among the first to locate in this neighborhood. Mr. Knudsen has lived a quiet, peaceful life, tilling his little farm with care and keeping within his means; a good neighbor, a kind father and a consistent citizen.

JAMES J. LAMB.

James J. Lamb was born at Huron, Wayne County, New York, April 29, 1835. He emigrated to Lehi in 1852 and there married Sarah E. Ross March 21, 1863. He was the father of ten children.

On March 21, 1866, he enlisted in the Black Hawk War and was mustered out of service July 18, 1866. He also fought all through the Walker War.

He drove one of the first teams back to Florence, Nebraska, in Joseph W. Young's company after Mormon immigrants who were too poor to furnish ways for themselves to come to Utah. While at Florence, he was chosen to drive to Utah with George Q. Cannon, who was just then returning home from a mission to England. He also went with a company of volunteers to join an expedition to go to Salmon River, Idaho, and assist in bringing the settlers from Fort Limhi, who were surrounded by hostile Indians who had killed some of the white men. This was one of the hardest trips he was called to make.

SARAH E. ROSS LAMB.

Mr. Lamb was a man of good character, a trusted citizen, a good husband and father and had many friends wherever he was known.

He was thrown from a load of lumber and instantly killed, October 21, 1896, at the age of 61 years, leaving a wife, five boys, and four girls.

LARS VICTOR LARSON.

Lars Victor Larson, son of Lars Larson and Stena Katerine Anderson, was born in Orebro, Sweden, July 24, 1857. Until 14 years of age he lived on a farm with his parents, when he was apprenticed to a shoemaker, remaining with him for three years. In August, 1877, he joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In 1880, he was ordained an elder and spent two years in missionary work on the island of Gotland. In 1882, he emigrated to Utah, locating in Salt Lake City, where he was married to Hilda Cristin Soderlund, by whom he had nine children, five boys and four girls. He lived in Salt Lake City but a short time, when he moved to Lehi, where he has lived for twenty-five years, engaged in shoemaking with occasional trips in the mountains prospecting for the precious metals. He was one of the first to build a home on what was known for many years as the "Big Pasture" south-east of Lehi, making a garden spot of what was formerly considered land too salty for anything but grazing purposes. Since the people divided on national party lines he has been active in politics, speaking his views on economic questions at all times freely and fearlessly. He is an industrious and energetic citizen.

HENRY LEWIS.

Henry Lewis, son of Phillip Lewis and Cathrine Evans Lewis, was born April 28, 1854, in Llanelthy, Wales. He was baptized August 27, 1862, by Phillip Lewis; confirmed by James F. Watters August 27, 1862, and labored as a deacon for many years. He emigrated to Utah in June, 1871. Here he was ordained an elder July 22, 1871. He was married to Jane Sarah Goody June 30, 1873, who was the daughter of Henry Goody and Mary Wilshire, and was born at London, England.

February 15, 1856. They have had a family of eleven children, seven sons and four daughters.

Mr. Lewis was appointed acting deacon in the eleventh district of Lehi March 1, 1879; was appointed acting priest in the third district of Lehi March 6, 1880; was set apart as Sunday school teacher by Elder William Yates March 28, 1880; was set apart as second counselor to Lott Russon of the elders' quorum March 16, 1884; was appointed missionary for the Y. M. M. I. A. October 28, 1889; and was ordained a seventy March 10, 1889, by Elder T. R. Cutler.

He went to Great Britain on a mission on February 24, 1893, and was there until April 8, 1895. Upon his return he labored with the missionary fund committee from 1896 to 1909, and collected thousands of dollars to send to missionaries.

On December 20, 1903, he was chosen bishop of the Third Ward of Lehi, and was set apart by Elder John Henry Smith. He was one of the Building Committee of the Lehi Tabernacle and was appointed treasurer, and received in cash and merchandise $30,913.39, and paid out $30,938.61, from 1900 to 1904, a balance to his credit of $25.22.

He also held many other positions of trust. He was a member of the City Council, a School Trustee, and helped promote many home industries of our county. He has been a director in the People's Co-operative Institution for twelve years, and at present is president of the North Bench Irrigation Company.

ABRAHAM LOSEE.

Abraham Losee, one of the early pioneers of Utah, was born in Holderman Township, Upper Canada, September 6, 1814. He joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints at an early date and was with the main body of Saints throughout all their persecutions until their removal to the Rocky Mountains, being intimately acquainted with the Prophet Joseph Smith. In the year 1848, he drove a team across the plains for Bishop Whitney, and was married in the same year, after reaching Salt Lake City, to Mary Elizabeth Lott. She also had been with the Saints in the East, and had lived with the Prophet's family and worked for him when 13 years of age.

After having worked on the Church farm at Salt Lake City for two years, he was called to remove and settle in Utah Valley, by Brigham Young. Bringing his family with him, he came and lived in what is now known as Lehi field, for the first winter in a covered wagon, having four men boarding with him. From then until his death he remained a citizen of Lehi and served as a City Councilman for several years. Having reared a family of eight, two boys and six girls, he died October 25, 1887, being 73 years old. His wife died in May, 1888, at the age of 60 years. They remained faithful church members and progressive citizens until their death.

PERMELIA DARROW LOTT.

Permelia Darrow Lott, daughter of Mary Ward and Joseph Darrow, and granddaughter of General Ward and Captain Darrow of Revolutionary times, was born at Bridgewater, Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, Sunday, December 15, 1805. She received her education from the best schools of the times, and afterward, prior to her marriage, she became a school teacher, riding horseback twenty miles to and from her work.

On April 27, 1823, she married Cornelius P. Lott; and with him joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in its infancy, and so suffered the hardships and persecutions of being driven from their homes with the heroes of that epoch. They were the only members of their respective families to connect themselves with the Church, but they have left a large posterity to "rise up and call them blessed."

Father Lott and family were very warm friends and associates of the Smith family, especially the Prophet Joseph, as he had charge of the Church farm at Nauvoo and also held the same position in Utah after coming to Salt Lake City with Heber C. Kimball's company in the autumn of 1848. Their first home was where the Auerbach's new store now stands.

After her husband's death, which occurred July 6, 1850, she, with her family, moved to Lehi in the spring of 1851, where one daughter, Mrs. Abraham Losee, had preceded her. Her first home in Lehi was at the spring now owned by A. B. Anderson.

She was the mother of eleven children, five boys and six girls, all of whom have been pioneers in the true sense of the word. Grandma Lott, as an old lady, impressed one with her quiet dignity and sweet unassuming manners, and all who knew her loved her. She never sought publicity of any kind, but was ever ready with a helping hand for the sick or needy.

She died January, 1882, as she had lived, "faithful to her trust," at the age of 77 years and 18 days, and was carried to the Salt Lake cemetery and tenderly laid to rest by the side of her husband.

Following are the names of the children and those they married: Melissa (Ira Willes), John S. (Mary Faucet), Mary (Abraham Losse), Almira H. (John R. Murdock), Jane P. (Abram Hatch), Alzina L. (William S. S. Willes), Joseph (died young), Amanda (died young), Peter L. (Sariah Snow), Cornelius (died young), Benjamin Smith (Mary A. Evans). All have passed to the other side except Benjamin S., the youngest, who will be 65 years old November 16, and is commonly known as Uncle Ben.

ELIZABETH T. MOOREHEAD.

Elizabeth T. Moorehead was born July 31, 1812. Her father was owner of a large plantation in North Carolina. Here Elizabeth was born and received an excellent education in the girls' boarding schools and colleges of the South.

She moved to Mississippi, where she married James Madison Moorehead of Nashville, Tennessee. In Mississippi they both heard and received the gospel and came directly to Nauvoo. Her husband assisted in building the Nauvoo temple.

They were driven from Nauvoo with the Saints, crossed the Mississippi River, and camped in a tent, where her husband, one child, and her brother Joseph died, victims of exposure. A child had died at Nauvoo. She was now left with three children and spent the winter in Des Moines City among strangers who proved to be kind friends. In the spring her brother Preston came and moved her to Winter Quarters, and later she moved on again to Council Bluffs, where a child died.

She and her two children, Ann and Preston, came across the plains with her brother, Claiborne Thomas, and family and her nephew, Daniel Thomas, in Aaron Johnson's Company in 1850.

That fall all settled in Lehi. The winter of 1851-1852 she and her brother Preston taught the Lehi school, he taking the boys, she the girls.

She was married to Samuel White, by whom she had one child, Elizabeth White Merrill, of Preston, Idaho. All moved to Cedar Fort, where her son Preston married Cordelia Smith, and daughter Ann married Harrison Ayers Thomas. Both have reared large families. They moved to American Fork when the soldiers located at Camp Floyd; here they owned a large farm which contained land where the old depot stood.

After several years they moved to Cache Valley and were among the first settlers of Smithfield. She was first Relief Society president of Smithfield. She died here December 12, 1894. Her son, Preston, was first counselor in the bishopric of that ward for over thirty years. He died in 1896. Her daughter, Ann, and husband moved to Preston, Idaho, in 1903, where he died the next year, a good Latter-day Saint, loved and respected by all.

SAMUEL MULLINER.

Samuel Mulliner was born in Headdington, East Lothian, Scotland, January 15, 1809. He emigrated to America in 1832, settling near the city of Toronto, in Canada.

He was baptized by Theodore Turley, September 10, 1837. The following spring he moved with his family to Missouri, and later settled in Springfield, Illinois, November 4, 1838. He was ordained a teacher March 10, 1839. On May 6, 1839, he was ordained an elder, and a seventy, July 16, 1839.

Soon after this, he left his family and started on a foreign mission. He and his companion, Alexander Wright, arrived at Glasgow December 20, 1839. The next day they continued their journey to Edinburgh, where his parents resided. They were the first elders to go to Scotland. On January 14, 1840, he baptized a number into the Church as the first fruits of the gospel in Scotland. On the 19th, he blessed some children and administered the sacrament for the first time in that vicinity. On that occasion he received the gift of tongues. They were very successful in their labors and baptized a great number, among whom were his own parents.

He left Glasgow on October 2, 1840, and returned to America, arriving home December 19, 1840. He afterward moved to Nauvoo, Illinois, from which place he was again sent on a mission in November, 1842. He organized a branch of the Church at Cambria, Niagara County, New York, April 27, 1843. He was released to return home July 2, 1843.

In 1849, as he was preparing to go to Utah, he was sent on a business mission to the East. He returned home the same year. In 1850 he came on to Utah and settled in Great Salt Lake City with his family, six in number. He bought a lot, which now is occupied by the Walker Brothers Bank, and started a tannery and shoe shop, making the first leather in the state. He built a comfortable dwelling house. He bought a grist mill at American Fork, and soon after built a carding mill adjoining it, and also a sugar cane mill. With the latter he made molasses for the settlers. He also built a grist mill at what was known as Spring Creek, between Lehi and American Fork, where he resided most all the remainder of his days.

He gave employment to many Saints and new-comers and did much for the poor and needy. He never allowed any to suffer for the want of food or clothes if he knew it.

He died February 25, 1891, at the age of 82 years, 1 month, and 10 days.

ANDREW A. PETERSON.

Andrew A. Peterson was the son of Andreas Peterson and Marna Anderson, and was born in Ystad, Sweden, January 13, 1840. He joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints October 1, 1854, being a member of the first branch organized in Sweden. In 1855 he was ordained to the lesser priesthood and shortly after migrated to Denmark, where he labored for two years as a teacher, when he was ordained an elder and in 1858 was sent on a mission to his native land. In 1862 he was honorably released from his missionary labors to emigrate to Utah. He started on this journey in the first part of April and while passing through Germany was married on the River Elbe to Mary Ann Pherson. They crossed the plains in Captain Liljenquist's ox-team company, arriving in Lehi in October, 1862. He resided in Lehi continuously to the time of his death and held many positions of trust and honor. As a public servant he had few superiors, for his honesty and integrity were above reproach and his many years of service brought him the love and esteem of all with whom he associated.

For six terms Mr. Peterson was a member of the City Council; twelve years a member of the school board; several years a member of the water board; two years general water-master; four years a policeman; a number of years director of the People's Co-operative Institution; and one of the promoters and first stockholders of the Lehi Union Exchange.

In ecclesiastical affairs his record is an enviable one. For thirty-three years he was president of the deacons' quorum; for thirty-five years a faithful Sunday School teacher; for over thirty years he was president of the Scandinavian Saints of Lehi and for many years one of the presidents of the 68th quorum of seventies. He was ordained a seventy January 17, 1872, and a high priest January 5, 1907. He died December 30, 1911.

MARY ANN P. PETERSON.

Mary A. Peterson was the daughter of Earland Pherson and Margaret Ingemanson and was born in Halmstad, Sweden, MARY A. PHERSON PETERSON.

June 22, 1844. She embraced the gospel as taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in 1859, and emigrated to Utah in 1862, walking the entire distance across the plains. She was married to Andrew A. Peterson on the River Elbe in Germany enroute to Utah and has lived in Lehi ever since she arrived in October, 1862.

She has been a true wife and an affectionate mother and has passed through the trying times of early days in Lehi, helping her husband to raise a large and respectable family. She has been a member of the Relief Society almost from its organization and is still a faithful member in this society. She is the mother of ten children, six sons and four daughters. Those now living are: Leah, (Mrs. Lawrence Hill), Andrew, Mary Ann, (Mrs. Lyman P. Losee), Christina, (Mrs. Wm. E. Southwick), Joseph (now principal of the Snow Flake Academy, Arizona), Hyrum, and David.

ANDREW F. PETERSON.

Andrew F. Peterson was the son of Peter Anderson and Anne Evansen, and was born in Modum, Norway, October 13, 1823. He emigrated to America when a young man to seek his fortune. He was converted to the Mormon Church in Council Bluffs and was baptized November 19, 1849, by Torg Torstensen and confirmed by Benjamin Clapp. The following year he drove a team across the plains and on to California. He came back to Utah and settled in Cottonwood.

He was out in the mountains during the Echo Canyon War and was one of those who rode around the hills to deceive the soldiers in General Johnston's army. He came to Lehi in the "move" and afterward made it his home.

ANDREW F. PETERSON.

He was ordained a seventy April 9, 1852, in Salt Lake City, by Joseph Young, and was a member of the 33rd quorum. He married Hannah Christenson September 29, 1869, and was ordained a high priest in 1874 by Daniel S. Thomas. He went to Norway on a mission in 1877, and after being gone one year and a half, was released on account of ill health. He died April 17, 1881.

HANNAH C. PETERSON.

Hannah Christensen Peterson (Jones) is a native of Jylland, Denmark, born December 30, 1845, her parents being Simeon and Karen Christensen. She received a common school education and was brought up in the Lutheran church, being sprinkled as a child and confirmed at the age of 16 years. She was taught the trade of dressmaking, which she followed through life, being exceptionally well qualified for this line of work.

HANNAH C. PETERSON.

On May 26, 1867, she was baptized a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints by Elder Mauritz P. Anderson, her brother-in-law, and confirmed by Mathias C. Anderson. In the spring of 1869 she bid farewell to her native land and emigrated to Utah, crossing the ocean on the steamship "Minnesota," which left Liverpool July 15 and arrived at New York on July 28. She reached Taylor's Switch, near Ogden, August 6 and Pleasant Grove, August 15, 1869. After a short stay at the latter place, she came to Lehi and was married to Andrew F. Peterson September 29, 1869.

Mrs. Peterson soon adapted herself to her surroundings and although at first was not able to understand English, she was soon able to take part in public affairs. She was one of the first officers of the Primary Association and was an active Sunday School worker for twenty years. Her special work has been the Relief Society, in which she has always been active as teacher, trustee, counselor and president, being set apart for the latter position in October, 1907. At the age of 35 she was left a widow and thrown largely upon her own resources, but owing to her ability in her chosen calling she has lived in comparative comfort. For many years she has taught large classes of girls the art of dressmaking and she has done much of the sewing for those who have been laid away.

She married John J. Jones

July 15, 1897, and ten years later May 9, 1907, she was again left a widow.

CANUTE PETERSON.

Canute Peterson was born in Eidsfjord, Hardanger, Norway, May 13, 1824. The farm owned by his father is called Maurset, and is now visited by the tourists who go to view the picturesque waterfall called Voringfors, which is only a few miles distant. His parents emigrated to America in 1837, taking Canute with them, but leaving two older sons, John and Jacob, who preferred to remain in Norway. His parents settled in La Salle County, Illinois. The father died in 1838. Canute's mother lived some ten years after her husband's death, but was afflicted with rheumatism and confined to her bed during these many years. Sister Jacobs, a benevolent and faithful Latter-day Saint, gave her the care and the love as of a devoted sister. Sister Jacobs afterwards came to Lehi, where she was known to Brother Peterson's children as Grandma Jacobs, and spent her last years there. Young Canute had to take work among the farmers. Sometimes he would be miles away from his mother; but when through his work Saturday night, he would walk all the way home, though it took most of the night to reach it and most of the following night to return, in order to spend Sunday with his beloved mother. As he grew older he tried to buy a few luxuries for her. Before he left the state, he had paid the debt which his father had incurred through his and his wife's sickness. This act shows how dearly he cherished the memory of his parents. No one could have made a claim on him for the debt. Money was scarce and wages low, but he was determined that none should lose through having loaned money to his father, and after years of toil he succeeded in paying it in full.

When Canute was 18 years of age, his mother and he joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He was baptized August 12, 1842. There was a large number of Scandinavians living in La Salle County, Illinois, and a large branch of the Church was raised up there. He visited Nauvoo in 1844 and was ordained a seventy. The same year he was called to take a mission to Wisconsin. Here he baptized quite a number and organized a branch of the Church.

A few miles from Ottawa lived Widow Nelson, who had a number of sons and daughters. She was kind to the poor and even the tramp was never turned away from her hospitable home. Here Canute Peterson was always a welcome guest. One of the daughters, Sarah Ann, a couple of years younger than he, had also joined the Church, and thus they were thrown much into each other's company, attending meetings and other gatherings of the Saints. She was a lovely girl and a most lovable woman.

When the Saints were advised to gather with the Church in Utah, she showed her integrity to the gospel by leaving her good home and those she loved so highly. A number of the Saints left La Salle for Utah in 1849; among them was Canute Peterson and Sarah A. Nelson. In crossing Iowa their camp was attacked with cholera, and Miss Nelson came down with it. Canute Peterson felt deep anxiety on her account. Should she die what would her mother and relatives say? The thought was agonizing to him. He went into a little grove by the creek and plead with the Lord to spare her life. When he arose from his knees he felt endowed with heavenly power and went to her wagon and placing his hand on her head he commanded her to arise and be healed. She felt a miraculous power pervade her and was healed immediately. When they came to Mt. Pisgah, they met Elder Orson Hyde. He performed the marriage ceremony, making Canute and Sarah husband and wife. They reached Utah in the fall and settled in Salt Lake City. Next year he was called to go and help settle Lehi.

In the fall of 1850, in company with Jesse W. Fox, Nelson Empey, and Henry Royle, he went out to the present site of Lehi and helped to survey the town-site. He did not move his family to Lehi until the middle of March, 1851. He helped make water ditches and commenced breaking his farm when he was called to go to Scandinavia on a mission. His wife was left with the care of two children, and though it was a time of Indian troubles and grasshoppers, she felt the Lord had richly blessed her. When the grasshoppers had swept the fields clean, her little patch of wheat was spared and she raised sixty bushels of treasured breadstuff. She helped many who had lost their whole crop.

Canute Peterson returned in 1856, bringing a large company of immigrants with him, whom he inspired with a deep love for him. He became counselor to Bishop Evans.

In 1867 he was called to go to Ephraim to preside over that ward as bishop. In 1870 he was called to take a mission to Scandinavia to preside over that mission. He returned in 1872.

When President Brigham Young organized the Sanpete Stake, Canute Peterson was chosen as its president. He held this position until the stake was divided and then he continued to preside over the South Sanpete Stake, until his death, which occurred October 14, 1902. He held the office of stake president more than twenty-five years. He was generally loved and esteemed by the Saints. He was a good gospel preacher. The Bible and the book of Doctrine and Covenants were his favorite books, and few were so well versed in the Scriptures as he.

He loved Lehi and its people, among whom were many of his dearest friends, and he never tired of relating his experiences during the seventeen years he sojourned there.

His wife Sarah died in May, 1896. Two wives, Mariah and Charlotte, and fifteen children survived him.

JAMES Q. POWELL.

James Q. Powell, a native of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, was born November 7, 1807, and emigrated to Utah in Pulsipher's company, arriving in Salt Lake City in September, 1848.

He lived in Cotton wood (now Murray) four years, moved to the Point of the Mountain in 1852, and to Lehi in 1856.

He was among the first to own sheep in Utah, having brought a number with him across the plains. He was eminently successful as a sheep and cattle raiser, which business he followed in connection with farming. In the early days he often sold his wool for grain and vegetables.

Mr. Powell was married three times. In 1829 he married Susan Charlston, who bore him four children. She died in Pennsylvania in 1840. Some time

THADDEUS POWELL.

Thaddeus Powell, son of James Q. and Mary Cooper Powell, was born September 30, 1854, near the Point of the Mountain, in Salt Lake County, Utah. His boyhood was spent in herding sheep and cattle and in going to school a few weeks in the winter time at Lehi.

MRS. JAMES Q. POWELL.

after, he married Jane Cooper, who accompanied him to Utah. She was the mother of five children. She died in Lehi May 16, 1893.

In 1855 he married Hannah Anderson, a native of Denmark, who had two children. She died in Lehi, August 4, 1899. Of all these children only four are now living: Ann living in Salt Lake City; Naomi, living in

THADDEUS POWELL.

He married Esther Ann Ashton January 24, 1883. To them have been born five children, as follows: Thaddeus A., Eugene, Leland, Hazel May (Mrs. Isaac Bone), and Thomas James. Mr. Powell started in the sheep business in 1872 and continued till 1891. During this time he owned herds of from 2000 to 4000 head.

He bought the Mulliner mill property in 1884, and sold it in 1890 to the Utah Sugar Company. The site is now occupied by the first sugar factory built in Utah.

He was director of the Lehi Commercial and Savings Bank from 1893 to 1900 and a member of the City Council in 1894 and 1895. Mr. Powell is sound in judgment, prudent in his undertakings, and altogether a progressive and enterprising citizen.

ESTER A. A. POWELL.

Ester Ann Ashton Powell, the wife of Thaddeus Powell, and the third child of Thomas and Arminta Lawrence Ashton, was born February 17, 1856, in Lehi, Utah.

In her early life, during the hard times, she carded wool and spun yarn which her mother wove into cloth for the family which in those days was clothed in homespun and glad to get it. Her education was limited, as there were no free schools. Her father would teach his children what he could in the evenings. However, in spite of these handicaps, Mrs. Powell grew up to be a capable and useful woman. She is one that is ever trying to do her full duty as a wife, mother, and member of the community.

WILLIAM E. RACKER.

William E. Racker was born in Aarhus, Denmark, January 23, 1853, and was the son of Christian F. and Jacobine Racker. His father died when William E. was five months old. He spent his early life in Denmark and was educated in the schools of that country. At the age of fifteen years he emigrated to America, being the second son but now the oldest son living.

He arrived in Salt Lake City Sept. 25, 1868, where he remained for a year, the remainder of the family coming to Lehi where he joined them later.

He began life in Lehi working at anything he could get to do, in the field or on the threshing machine; later he became clerk in the tithing office under Bishop David Evans, staying there seven years. At the end of that time, he accepted a position as bookkeeper with the People's Co-operative Institution. He was advanced to the position of secretary and treasurer of held that place for ten years and then was made Superintendent in 1893. He also held the office of secretary and treasurer of the institution.

Mr. Racker was married on the 31st of March, 1873, to Miss Rozilla Evans, daughter of Bishop Evans. By this marriage twelve children have been born, nine of whom are living.

Mr. Racker is a Republican in politics. He has been Treasurer of Lehi for three terms and has been prominent in all public affairs in the early days. He was one of the leading men in getting the sugar factory located in Lehi; was one of the promoters of the Lehi Commercial and Savings Bank, and a director of it for years; was president and director of the first electric light company, in the north end of Utah County; and one of the owners and builders of the Union Hotel.

Mr. Racker is a member of the L. D. S. Church and is now a high priest. In February, 1903, he went on a mission to his native country, returning in May, 1904. In August of that year he organized the Racker Merchantile Company and became president and manager. In 1906 he was re-elected president and director of the Uah County Light and Power Company, and remained an officer of that company until its consolidation with the Knight Power Company.

At the city election in the fall of 1911, he was elected Mayor of Lehi City and commenced to serve in that office on January 1, 1912, and is still serving in that capacity.

When the State Bank of Lehi was organized he was chosen a director and chairman of the Executive Board of that bank.

FREDERICK E. RACKER.

Frederick Eugene Racker, son of William E. and Rozilla Racker, was born August 4, 1877, at Lehi, Utah. At the age of eight years he was baptized a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and at the age of twelve was ordained a deacon. His school days were spent in the Lehi public schools. At the age of twelve he started as an apprentice in the printing business with the Lehi Publishing Company, and from the age of fourteen to the age of twenty he was engaged as teamster and clerk in the People's Co-operative Institution.

When war broke out between the United States and Spain, he was one of the first three volunteers from Lehi, and served in the Utah Cavalry during the war with Spain. Not having been engaged in any action during his enlistment in the cavalry, he again re-enlisted in the 24th Infantry and went to the Philippines with the regiment, where he participated in some six or eight engagements with the enemy. While there he was stricken down with a very severe attack of dysentery and was taken to the hospital at Manila where he remained several weeks and was then sent over to the United States, having become so weak that he had to be carried on board the ship that brought him to San Francisco. After several months treatment in the hospital in the Praesidio, he obtained his release and came home.

On the 31st of July, 1900, he was married to Miss Orpha Adams of American Fork, Utah. Soon after his marriage, he again engaged as clerk and later as a miner until June, 1904, at which time he again enlisted in the United States Army, and this time he was assigned to the 29th infantry, Company G, and served as clerk of the company for a period of several months.

Having obtained a knowledge of printing in his youth, he was detailed as post printer and on the 12th of April, 1905, he was detailed as school teacher at the post.

He was very much beloved by his comrades and highly respected by the officers of his company.

On Sunday, the 23rd of April, 1905, he died in the post hospital from a very acute attack of dysentery and cramps. Tuesday following he was escorted by the full garrison at Fort Douglas with great military honors, commanded by Capt. Wells, Adjutant-General and Commanding Officer of the post, the cortege being preceded by the post Band.

He died in full fellowship in the faith of the gospel, and he always had a firm belief in the principles of the same, and so expressed himself to his parents the last time he talked to them.

JOHN ROBERTS, JR.

John Roberts, son of John Roberts, Sen., and Adelaide Ford Roberts, was born December 20, 1848, in Woolwich, Kent, England. He joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in 1863, and emigrated to America with his parents in 1863.

At the age of 14 he drove three yoke of oxen across the plains, arriving in Salt Lake City in October, 1863, and came to Lehi a month later. He went East for emigrants in 1865 and helped to bring the Thomas Taylor company to Salt Lake City. Two years later, 1867, he fought in the Black Hawk War. He spent two years freighting by team in Nevada, and for several years did teaming and farming.

He married Alice Ann Taylor, daughter of James and Ann Taylor, December 25, 1872, from which union ten children were born.

He entered the employment of the People's Co-operative Institution in 1882. He was manager of the Branch Co-op. For fourteen years, city treasurer six terms, a member of the City Council two terms, and mayor of the city one term. He served on the School Board six years, as chairman, secretary, and treasurer.

Death took his wife, Alice Ann, in the year 1895. He then married Mary Ann Cutler Standing, and in a few years was left again, she passing away in 1900. One year later he married Emma Jane Evans Taylor and has three sons from this marriage.

He has taken an active part in ecclesiastical organizations of the Church, was one of the presidents of the 68th quorum of seventies, and is at present an active block teacher and a high priest.

GEORGE G. ROBINSON.

George G. Robinson was born October 20, 1869, in Newcastle County, Delaware. He received his education in the public schools. At the age of 16 years he commenced to learn the milling business with McLaughlin Brothers of Newark, Delaware, going to Crosswick, N. J., in 1888 to take charge of a mill for the Eagle Roller Mill Company of that place. He came to Utah at the request of Bishop W. D. Robinson, arriving at American Fork, Utah, in December, 1890, working for W. D. Robinson upwards of five years, after which he worked for the Chipman Mercantile Company, having charge of their mill at American Fork. He leased the Lehi Roller Mills in April, 1907, running the same for twenty-seven months. He then returned to the employ of the Chipman Mercantile Company and assumed charge of their mill. In June, 1910, he moved to Lehi and bought the Lehi Roller Mills, also the home of Louis Garff. He was elected to the City Council for the two year term in November, 1911, and re-elected as the four year term councilman in 1913. George G. Robinson was married to Beulah Adams, daughter of Joshua and Mary B. Adams of American Fork, January 2, 1894.

JOHN E. ROSS.

John E. Ross was one of the early settlers of Lehi, having arrived here in November, 1853. He has probably done more in an educational way for Lehi than any other man, having taught in the local schools for twenty-nine years without a break. When he commenced teaching there were no free schools in Utah and his pay in the earlier days consisted of various kinds of produce. He served fourteen years as city recorder and was an excellent penman. He also served two years as city alderman.

He has also been a religious worker, serving twenty-five years in the Sunday Schools.

JOHN E. ROSS.

He was an Indian war veteran, serving in the Black Hawk War in 1866. He was a teamster in his youth. In 1861 he drove four yoke of cattle across the plains, back to Florence for immigrants, and in 1864 he drove a six-mule team to Los Angeles for freight for John R. Murdock.

Mr. Ross was the son of Stephen W. and Jane Ross and was born in Newark, New Jersey, January 13, 1840. His father died when he was 9 years of age, and the year following he came with his mother to Council Bluffs, Iowa. In 1852 they came to Salt Lake City, and the year following came to Lehi. July 1, 1865, he married Amanda Norton, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wiley Norton, who were also among the first settlers of Lehi.

LOT RUSSON AND ELIZA ROUND.

Lot Russon and Eliza Round were born in Wetherston, Worcestershire, England. Lot was born January 1, 1829, and Eliza on October 21, 1830. Lot was a lad of 13 when his father died, and he was the support of his mother and four sisters for many years. On December 25, 1850, he married Eliza Round.

They were baptized into the Church in August, 1852. He was a collier and she made nails until their fifth child was born. They were faithful in their church duties. In October, 1871, they emigrated to Utah with eight children, namely: Charlotte, Thomas, Mary, Sarah, Lot Jr., Eliza, Enoch, Annie Amelia (deceased), and George E. Two were later born in Lehi: Joseph F. and Kate L. All are stalwart Latter-day Saints and have done temple work.

Brother Lot was appointed president of the elders' quorum by Apostle Erastus Snow, June 10, 1877, being the first to receive that appointment in Lehi, and was president twenty-two years. He missed only four meetings in that time.

Eliza held the office of a teacher in the Relief Society for thirty years, and died in the harness July 22, 1908, in her seventy-eighth year, surrounded by her husband and children—all except Enoch, who was doing missionary work in England. Lot is 85 years old and still hale. His posterity number at this reading eleven children, eighty-two grandchildren, and seventy-six great grandchildren, making a total of 170 souls.

HENRY ROYLE.

Henry Royle, one of the original pioneers of Lehi, was born in England. Very little is known of his early life. Some time in the early forties he joined the "Mormon" Church and took an active part in preaching and advocating its doctrines, being rotten-egged by hoodlums for so doing. He married a sister of David Clark, another Lehi pioneer; she soon died and left him without family.

He came to America about the year 1846, and worked two years in St. Louis, in the meantime getting together an outfit consisting of oxen, cows, and other necessities with which to cross the plains.

In the winter of 1847-1848 he married Ann Capstick, and on the 18th of March, following, they moved to St. Joseph, Missouri, from where they later started for Salt Lake City, arriving at the latter place September 21, 1848, where he built a home.

In the fall of 1848 and the following spring he made adobes and, being a mason, helped to build them into one of the first meeting houses in Salt Lake City. In the summer of 1850 in company with Canute Peterson and others, he explored the north end of Utah Valley with a view of taking up land and finding a suitable place for a settlement. In September of that year he came back to Dry Creek with his brother-in-law, David Clark, and while felling logs for a house, had his collar bone broken. He went back to Salt Lake and remained until spring, when he brought his wife and infant daughter, (Mrs. Sarah A. Olmstead), to Lehi and lived for a time in a covered wagon box. On June 22, 1851, his son, Henry Moroni, was born, being the first white male child to see the light of day in Lehi. After a brief illness, he died July 8, 1852, aged about thirty-two years.

ANN CAPSTICK ROYLE.

Ann Capstick, the daughter of Ann and Christopher Capstick, was born July 26, 1812, at Old Hutton, Bridge End, north of Westmoreland, England. Her mother died December 31, 1836; her father died in August, 1841.

In 1842, with her sister, Jane, she came to America. In 1843, July 30, she was baptized a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in Newark, Connecticut. A short time after she made the acquaintance of Henry Royle, whom she married in the winter of 1847. March 18, 1848, they left St. Louis, where they had been residing and located at St. Joseph, Missouri; from there they left for Salt Lake City with an ox team, arriving in Utah on the 21st of September, 1848. Here they built a home on a city lot. September 22, 1849, their first child, Sarah Ann, was born. In the spring of 1851 they moved to Lehi. June 22, 1851, their son, Henry Moroni, was born. July 8, 1852, after a short sickness, her husband died. November 9, 1852, she married John Mercer of American Fork, Utah. October 6, 1853, she gave birth to her daughter, Martha (Mrs. James Kirkham). On March 8, 1860, her husband, John Mercer, died. In the fall of 1861 she married Samuel Mulliner. After living with Samuel Mulliner for a year or two, her children built her a home next to the residence of her daughter, Martha Kirkham, where she remained until her death, July 7, 1879.

GEORGE P. SCHOW.

George Peter Schow was born in Ronne, Bornholm, Denmark, July 20, 1853, his parents being Jens Hansen Schow and Sine Kirstine Larsen. His father's home was know as Helligdoms-gaarden, being a noted pleasure resort and its rugged cliffs and beautiful scenery were know all over the northern part of Europe.

When George was fourteen years old, his father died and the next four years were spent with his uncle. Although he was not a Mormon, at the age of eighteen years he determined to leave his native land and go to Utah. His relatives and friends ing in the mines of Little Cottonwood and Bingham Canyon. For a number of years he freighted to Bingham, hauling all manner of produce, such as butter, eggs, fruit, and vegetables and selling it to the people. For the last number of years he has been one of Lehi's leading farmers and at present, in company with his sons, is engaged quite extensively in dry farming west of Jordan River.

Mr. Schow first heard the gospel as taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Lehi, where he has made his home since his arrival in Utah, and was baptized by Abraham Losee. He married Celestia Willes, a daughter of William Sidney Smith Willes and Alzina Lucinda Lott, November 18, 1880. To them have been born five children as follows: George Sidney, Virginia (Mrs. Arthur Webb), Alzina Lucinda (Mrs. Albert Bone), Floyd, and Joice Pamela.

Mr. Schow is one of Lehi's progressive citizens, always taking part in every enterprise that is for the public good. He is a strong supporter of education and to his honor be it said that his son, George Sidney, was the first Lehi boy to graduate from the University of Utah. During the years 1900 and 1901, Mr. Schow was in California teaching the Californians how to irrigate their tried to persuade him against this course. His uncle, who was childless and well to do, promised to make it worth his time if he would stay. But it was all to no purpose; there seemed to be an irresistible impulse taking him to Utah, his brother, Peter, having preceded him there. He reached Utah in April, 1872, and spent the next few years work-lands, being recommended for this position by Bishop Thomas R. Cutler. When the four wards of Lehi were organized December 20, 1903, Mr. Schow was selected as Second Councillor to Andrew Fjeld in the Bishopric of the First Ward, a position he still holds.

JOSEPH JOHNSON SMITH.

Joseph Johnson Smith was the son of William and Sophia Brooks Smith, and was born April 8, 1821, in Kempston, Bedfordshire, England. He learned the trade of blacksmith and wheelwright and became a proficient mechanic in this line. On March 1, 1840, he married Mary Ann Smart and on September 23, 1841, he was baptized a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints by John Sheffield.

In May, 1843, in company with his father, mother and some of his brothers and sisters who also had accepted Mormonism, he emigrated to Nauvoo, Illinois. On the 8th of August, 1844, his wife died, leaving him with three small children and in April, 1845, his mother died. Soon after this his father returned to England, where he later married and raised another family.

Joseph J. left Nauvoo in May, and in company with Bishop David Evans and others lived at Bonepart during the summer. In September Bishop Evans and company moved forty miles west of Pisgah on the head waters of Nodaway, intending to settle there, but their provisions gave out and their cattle died, so they were compelled to move into Missouri for supplies.

On the first of January, 1850, Mr. Smith was married to Ann Coleman, daughter of Prime and Sarah Thornton Coleman, by Bishop David Evans at Maryville, Missouri, and the same year they crossed the plains, arriving in Salt Lake City, September 17, 1850. They lived in Salt Lake City for one year, when, on the solicitation of Bishop David Evans, they moved to Lehi.

Mr. Smith was the first blacksmith to settle in Lehi and took an active part in the building up of the community. He made plows for the farmers of wagon tires which Johnston's army brought; made the first iron rollers for crushing sugar cane in the manufacture of molasses; and made nails and tools of various kinds. This work occupied his spare time in winter and in the summer he followed farming. Being of an industrious disposition, he was able to surround his family with all the necessities and some of the luxuries of life and was considered well to do in those days.

He was a stockholder in many of the industries and enterprises launched for the building up of the country. He was active in furnishing supplies for those were out on Indian expeditions and after the Church immigration. He was among the first to launch out in the bee industry. He homesteaded a quarter section of land some distance north of Lehi on Dry Creek, which he brought into a high state of cultivation and also built a saw-mill, using the water of Dry Creek for power. On February 10, 1865, he married Sarah Ann Liddiard and all together raised a very large family, as follows:

Children of Mary Ann Smart: Caroline (Mrs. Wm. Skeens), Mercy, and Joseph.

Children of Ann Coleman: Sarah Ann (Mrs. Samuel Southwick), Joseph William, George, Hyrum, Aldura (Mrs. James Roberts), Julia Elizabeth, (Mrs. James Taylor), Alfred James, Samuel Abraham, John Franklin, Rebecca, Jacob, David, Albert, and Moroni Alma.

Children of Sarah Ann Liddiard: Florence Sopho (Mrs. J. E. Cotter), and Elizabeth.

After a lingering illness of heart trouble, he died August 6, 1902.

ANN COLEMAN SMITH.

Ann Coleman, daughter of Prime and Sarah Coleman, and wife of Joseph J. Smith, was born in Oldin, Bedfordshire, England on the 2nd day of October, 1833. She was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in Bedfordshire, England,, by Elder John S. Thornton in December, 1842, and in 1843, together with her father's family, consisting of the following members: Elizabeth Coleman Jacobs, Rebecca Coleman Evans, Martha Coleman Southwick, Prime Coleman, George Coleman, and William Coleman, migrated to America, and arrived in Nauvoo May 12, 1843. She was personally acquainted with the Prophet Joseph Smith, and his brother, Hyrum, and passed through the persecutions the Saints were compelled to undergo at that time.

She was married to Joseph J. Smith at Morrisonville, Missouri, January 1, 1850, by Bishop David Evans, and in May following, in company with her husband, moved to Council Bluffs. On June 13, she crossed the Missouri River, and started across the plains with ox teams, for Utah, arriving in the fall of 1850. She lived in Salt Lake City one year, then moved to Lehi where she resided until her death.

She was the mother of 14 children, 10 sons, and 4 daughters. She was very industrious and enterprising in the settling and building up of this country, passing through all the hardships and trying times of early pioneer life. She was a dutiful, and considerate wife, a kind and loving mother, and was respected by all who knew her.

She passed away October 1, 1909, being 76 years old.

SARAH A. L. SMITH.

Sarah Ann Liddiard Smith was the daughter of Levi A. and Ann Liddiard. She was born at Windsor, England October 16, 1831, and joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints July 14, 1848, at East Woodhay, Hampshire, England, being a member of the Landers Conference.

She sailed for America on the ship, "Hudson," July 3, 1864; there were 1100 persons on board and six weeks were consumed in crossing the ocean. She crossed the plains in Captain Warren Snow's company and during the journey she cooked for a number of elders who had been on missions and were returning home. She arrived in Salt Lake City, November 31, 1864, and was married to Joseph J. Smith February 10, 1865, coming to Lehi the same year. She was the mother of two daughters, one dying in infancy, the other is Mrs. Florence Cotter. Mrs. Smith was of a refined yet independent disposition; having received a liberal education, she taught school for a number of years and was identified with the Sunday School as a teacher.

In 1887 she built a hotel by the Denver and Rio Grande depot which she conducted for a number of years. She died September 25, 1909.

WILLIAM SOUTHWICK.

My grandfather, Samuel Southwick, was born at Cradley, Shropshire, England, in 1770. My grandmother, Nancy Holloway Southwick, died in 1814, in England. My father, Edward Southwick, was born in Hanley, Shropshire, England, May 15, 1812. My mother, Mary Alexander Southwick, was born in July, 1812, in Dudley, England. My parents were married in 1834.

I, William, oldest son of my parents, was born at Dudley, Staffordshire, England, September 15, 1835. My parents were religious, belonging to the Methodist church. To them were born the following children: William, Joseph, Sarah, Edward, Samuel, Mary, John, and James. We were born of goodly parents, who always taught us to be virtuous and honorable all our lives. My grandfather, as also my parents, was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in May, 1844.

I was baptized December 24, 1848, by my uncle, Joseph Southwick. I attended Sunday School some five or six years. In the spring of 1854, I was ordained a priest, my duties being to visit the Saints. In March, 1855, I was ordained an elder by Edmund Ellsworth, and by him sent out as a traveling elder in the Warwick Conference.

In November of this year I was released, and started for Utah with a company of Saints from Rugby of the same conference. On November 30 we set sail for New York on the ship "Emerald Isle." We landed on the 1st of January, 1856, after a pleasant voyage. I spent some two months in New York, Philadelphia, and Saint Louis. Here I engaged to one Preston Thomas of Lehi (missionary to Texas), to drive a team for him to Utah. I left Saint Louis on March 4 on the river steamer, "Falls City," for New Orleans. After our arrival we re-shipped on a gulf steamer for Powder Horn, Texas. Here we met the Saints preparing for journeying to Utah, and on April 7 we struck camp for the West.

After traveling some 2,500 miles on the Cherokee trail and part on the Mormon trail, we landed in Salt Lake City on September 17, and at Lehi on the 19th. After my arrival I engaged to Preston Thomas to work on his farm for a year at $10.00 per month.

The two following years, 1858-1859, I worked for John Zimmerman and John C. Nagle on their farms. Soon after my arrival I was mustered into a foot company, John Norton being captain, and soon afterwards formed a home company of which John S. Lott was captain. During the two first winters, I spent much time as a home guard at the fort gates; the first winter without shoes, and scarcely enough clothing to keep warm. There were no fires; nothing pleasant about it, only discharge of duty. Indeed I had to keep moving to keep from freezing. During the "Move" I was able to get shoes and warmer clothing, after the army came in. Their coming was a great temporal blessing to the whole people. I also assisted in herding and guarding the citizens' cattle up Utah Lake, and in taking part in all general work.

On October 20, 1859, I took to wife Martha Jane Coleman, (owing to the army being here the endowment house was closed, therefore we were married by Bishop's Counselor L. H. Hatch). There were born to us six children: Wm. E., Samuel H., George F., Mary Ann, Rebecca, and Joseph.

In the spring of 1860 I bought a piece of land from Bishop Evans, and started farming for myself. In 1858, at the organization of the first elders' quorum, I was chosen as secretary. I was one of a committee in assisting to build the west school rooms, also helped in finishing the Meeting House. I was captain of police two years under Marshal Abel Evans, in the '60s.

November 28, 1862, I was ordained to the office of seventy in the 68th quorum by President Israel Evans; and at the same time set apart as secretary of the quorum, which position I filled for twenty-five years. On December 11, 1880, I was set apart as one of the council; I remained in this position until I was ordained high priest on December 1, 1906, by George Cunningham. Soon afterwards, I was called to act as second counselor to President A. R. Anderson in the Presidency of the high priests' quorum in the Alpine Stake of Zion. In 1858, I joined the Lehi choir. Some time after, I became its leader for a number of years. I was a teacher in the Sunday School, also secretary of the theological class, in all thirty years.

My wife, Martha Jane, was sealed to me in the Salt Lake Endowment House August 3, 1861, by President Daniel H. Wells. On May 28, 1864, I took for my second wife Savina C. Larson, daughter of Swen Larson of Sanpete. We were sealed in the Endowment House by President W. Woodruff. The names of children born to us: Sarah M., Emma F., Martha Ann, Edith A., Ernest L., and Raymond.

In 1863 my brother Samuel arrived in Lehi, where he made his home for years. Later he moved to Idaho. In 1864 my father, with two children, came to Lehi, my mother having died upon the plains. After seven years' residence here he died in 1873.

In the '60s I was a member of the old Dramatic Company. I was a home missionary in the old Utah Stake with Bishop Thomas R. Cutler one year. In 1904 I served one year as home missionary with Emil Anderson in the Alpine Stake of Zion. In the years 1865-1880 I labored under Bishop David Evans as block teacher, and under Bishop Cutler as an acting priest. I was general water master for Lehi for seven years, and president of the Lehi Water Company for two years.

In the fall of 1887, I received a call to take a mission to the Southern States. On March 29, 1888, I left home, and arrived in Chattanooga on April 4. Here I received my appointment to travel in the Eastern Tennessee-Western North Carolina Conference. After filling a satisfactory mission, I received an honorable discharge from the president of the Southern States Mission, William Spry. I returned home in the fall of 1889.

In the spring of 1890, I was appointed chairman of the Old Folks' Committee of Lehi, in which position I served very pleasantly for twenty years.

Since my return from my mission, my time has been spent in my home affairs, and my duties in the Church, and as a citizen of my home town, of which I feel proud, having lived for the past fifty-seven years watching it grow from a small village, surrounded by a mud wall as a protection against the invasion of hostile Indians, to its present surroundings. And may our posterity never cease to build upon the foundation laid by the early veterans until it shall become, through their industry and enterprise, the most beautiful city, overlooking that grand view of waters, the Utah Lake.

EDWARD SOUTHWICK.

Edward Southwick, who was the son of Edward Southwick and Mary Alexander, was born April 24, 1842 at Dudley, Worcestershire, England.

His father not being in the best of circumstances, Edward was put to work in a glass factory, at Sponlane, where he worked for a number of years, becoming quite proficient in his line of work. He afterwards learned the shoe making business from his father and also mastered this occupation. After working with his father for a number of years in Westbromwich, he went to Northampton, where he was engaged in the Mansfield shoe factory, the largest in the world at that time. He afterwards went to Norwich, where he was foreman in a small factory. From here he migrated to this country in the year 1871 on the steamship, "Nevada," which left Liverpool July 26, with 93 Saints under the direction of Lot Smith and arrived at Salt Lake City, August 16.

He then came direct to Lehi and not having sufficient work to occupy his time and make a living at his trade, he engaged in the construction work on the railroad that was being built up American Fork Canyon that year. When the railroad was completed, he engaged as a cook at the old Miller Mine in American Fork Canyon, and worked as such for a number of years, going then to Alta in Big Cottonwood Canyon where he was offered better wages. He commenced to work at his trade about the year 1876 and continued in this occupation the remainder of his life, and all of the early settlers will remember him from the fact that he made footwear for them all.

He was baptized in the year 1854 by Elder John White, was ordained an elder, and did some missionary work in his native land. He was ordained a seventy May 14, 1876, by William Clark, and was a member of the 68th quorum of seventy up to the time of his death. He was also a member of the School Board at the time of his death, the only public trust he ever held.

He was married to Ann Maria Taylor, February 18, 1866, in the old parish church of Dudley, England, and became the father of nine children. His eldest son Arthur James, who appears in the accompanying picture on his father's knee, was born March 24, 1876, at Birmingham, England. This picture was the only one Edward Southwick ever posed for. He was a man of great faith and rejoiced in visiting and administering to the sick. He died very suddenly on October 30, 1888, being sick only eight hours.

ANN M. T. SOUTHWICK.

Ann Maria Taylor, who was the daughter of John Taylor and Ann Maria Lager, was born March 11, 1841, at Westbromwich, Staffordshire, England. She was engaged as a domestic in her girlhood; received the gospel with other members of her father's family; was baptized in the year 1854, by John Taylor, and was a member of Westbromwich and Birmingham branch choir, for a number of years.

She was married to Edward Southwick March 18th, 1866, and became the mother of nine children, namely: Arthur James, now a resident of Provo, Utah; Clara, who was born March 5, at Norwich, England, now Mrs. George R. Meservy, of Provo, Utah, (whose picture appears as a baby with her mother below); Edward Southwick of Lehi, Utah; Dora May, now Mrs. William L. Fuller, of Preston, Idaho, and Frederick, Agnes, Katie Elizabeth, Alice, Maud, and John Alfred, all now deceased. John Alfred died in the Thames Hospital, New Zealand, March 12th, 1908, while filling a mission.

She passed through many trying circumstances during her life, but had a kind and loving disposition, and although afflicted with asthma all her days, was never heard to complain. She was a member of the Relief Society and a teacher in this organization at the time of her death, which occurred November 29, 1892, at Lehi, Utah.

EDWARD SOUTHWICK, JR.

Edward Southwick, Jr., who was the son of Edward Southwick and Ann Maria Taylor, is a product of Lehi, having been born September 13, 1871, in his uncle's house now standing on the corner of First North and Fourth West streets.

He was baptized October 3, 1880, by Lot Russon, Sen.; was ordained a deacon and a teacher by his father; was ordained an elder by Lot Russon, Sen., in July, 1889; and a seventy April 20, 1904, by President Seymour B. Young. He filled a mission in England from 1894 to 1896, also a mission to Colorado in 1899, returning in 1900. He has labored as a Sunday School teacher, superintendent, and stake officer for twenty-two years, and as a M. I. A. officer and teacher for twelve years. He was secretary of the deacons', elders', and seventies' quorums for a number of years, and was chosen and set apart as one of the presidents of the 68th quorum by President Seymour B. Young September 9, 1900. He has labored as such from that date to the present, now being the senior president of the quorum. He was city recorder of Lehi in 1898 and 1899, and a school trustee from 1907 to 1910, mayor of Lehi in 1910 and 1911, and a member of the tenth session of the Utah Legislature in 1913.

He is a director in the State Bank of Lehi and has been since its incorporation; has been employed in various occupations; but is at present engaged in the real estate business and farming.

He was married in the Salt Lake temple March 24, 1897, to Rachel Ann Webb, and is the father of the following named children: Ethel, Edward W., Hannah Pearl, John W., Owen W., Glen W., and Emma Ann.

EDWIN STANDRING.

Edwin Standring, a son of James and Mary Standring, was born April 27, 1828, in Oldham, Lancashire, England. He was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints March 4, 1848, in Oldham, and emigrated to Utah in 1853. In 1857 he came to Lehi and in 1858 was in the Echo Canyon War. In 1862, the high water year, he went back to the Missouri River after the Church immigration, driving an ox-team all the way.

On the 28th of November,

1862, he was ordained a seventy and in the fall of 1876, went on a short mission to the states, returning in May, 1877. In 1884, he was ordained a high priest and chosen as Second Counselor to Bishop Thomas R. Cutler.

On the 3rd of June, 1859, he married Rebecca Smith; she never had any children, but later in life she adopted Alice Bahr (Mrs. Henry Moroni Royle, Jr.)

On the 14th of February, 1864, he married Elizabeth Dixon who bore him one son who lived but six days; the mother died in December, 1867.

On the 28th of February, 1878, he married Ann Cutler, who became the mother of a girl and boy. The girl died in infancy and the boy is John Edwin. Mary Ann died July 13, 1900.

On the 8th of November, 1888, Mr. Standring was summoned to Provo on a charge of cohabitation. He was discharged and on the way home caught a severe cold which turned to pneumonia, causing his death November 20, 1888.

REBECCA S. STANDRING.

Rebecca Smith Standring, the wife of Edwin Standring, was born in North Hampton, North Hampshire, England, February 20, 1828. She was the daughter of William Smith and Charlotte Ford, being the fourth child in a family of ten children. It can truthfully be said of Mrs.

Standring that she forsook all for the gospel's sake, for having accepted the doctrines as taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in company with two sisters, she emigrated to America in 1855, leaving a husband who afterward followed her to Salt Lake City, and tried to persuade her to return to England with him. During her stay in Salt Lake City, she lived with the mother of Apostle Anthony Ivins and in the "Move" went south with the Saints. After the people returned to their homes, she came to Lehi to visit her sister and met Edwin Standring to whom she was married June 3, 1859, by James W. Taylor.

Mrs. Standring was refined and cultured, with queenly dignity, a natural leader and endowed with good practical sense. Being deprived of the privilege of motherhood, she took a prominent part in the public affairs of the community. During the early sixties she was one of the leading stars in the pioneer Home Dramatic Association and when the Sunday School was organized in 1866 she was the first lady teacher called to aid in this noble work. For thirty years she was one of the most prompt and efficient teachers in the school until compelled by stress of other duties to resign. For a number of years she was stake aid in the Primary Association in the old

Utah Stake and has labored for three months in each of the following temples: St. George, Manti, and Salt Lake.

At the organization of the Relief Society in Lehi, October 28, 1868, she was chosen secretary and served in this capacity until the resignation of President Sarah Coleman, October 2, 1879, when she was selected as the president of the society. On July 28, 1901, the well merited honor of presiding over the Relief Societies of the Alpine Stake was conferred upon her by the Stake Presidency. She faithfully performed the duties of this responsible calling until October 26, 1913, when through age and ill health she was honorably released.

In the Relief Society Mrs. Standing found ample scope for her talents as leader, and spiritual advisor and through her wise management the organization was brought to a high point of efficiency. Her works will long be held in grateful remembrance by her devoted sisters.

JOHN STEWART.

John Stewart was born in Chester Town, Kent County, Maryland, September 27, 1827. His parents died when he was quite small, so he was raised by his uncle and aunt, Arthur and Julianne Merit. Very little is known of his early life except that he joined the Mormon Church, being baptized in the Missouri River in the dead of winter; he came to Utah sometime before 1851.

Lydia M. Rolfe Stewart was born in Rumford, Oxford County, Maine December 26, 1831. Her father and mother joined the Mormon Church when she was quite young and moved to Kirtland, Ohio, where her father worked on the Kirtland temple. In 1836, they moved to Far West, and in 1838, they settled in Clayton, Illinois. When the old town of Commerce was purchased by the Church and the name changed to Nauvoo, the father secured a city lot and in 1839 moved his family there.

They lived in Nauvoo to see the temple finished and endured all the persecutions of that time.

In 1846, they crossed the Mississippi River and started for the west. They crossed the plains in the company of which A. O. Smoot was captain of 100 and Samuel Rolfe was captain of 100. They arrived in Salt Lake City, September 16, 1847, and on the 12th of February 1851, Lydia was married to John Stewart by Heber C. Kimball.

In response to a call from President Young they left for California a week after their marriage and settled in San Bernardino. In 1858 they were recalled by President Young, when they returned to Utah, locating in Beaver. In 1861 the family moved to Camp Floyd and in 1868 they came to Lehi, where they have since resided.

Mr. Stewart was a carpenter and builder and during the years of his residence in Lehi helped to build many of the residences and other structures. He died July 12, 1895, and was followed by his wife November 26, 1912.

The family consisted of eleven children as follows: Arthur Merit, James, Harriet Elizabeth (Mrs. Alonzo Rhodes), Julianne (Mrs. Edward Karren), John, Jr., Henry T., Harry Jasper, Margaret, Benjamin, and Samuel.

WILLIAM W. TAYLOR.

William Whitehead Taylor was born in Tetlow Fold, Oldham, Lancashire, England, December 12, 1828, being the youngest of the seven children of Samuel and Sarah Whitehead Taylor. He had little education, but was fond of books and spent most of his evenings at home reading.

He was converted to the Mormon faith by his brother, James, who presided over the Oldham Conference, and sailed for America September 5, 1849, on the ship "Berlin." During the voyage, cholera broke out and in twenty days forty-five deaths occurred. He landed at New Orleans and proceeded up the river to St. Louis, where he was met by his brothers, James and Thomas, who had left England the previous year. For two and one-half years he lived at Council Bluffs and suffered much at times for want of food. On the 6th of April, 1852, Mr. Taylor started for Utah in Isaac Bullock's company. While on the plains, he became lost and was found by an Indian, who took him to the Indian encampment and treated him kindly. This hospitable red skin had his squaw provide food for the white man's supper, also skins for a bed, and the next morning conducted him to his own company, also returning two horses which had strayed away. The company reached Salt Lake City, September 25, 1852.

For a year Mr. Taylor lived in Salt Lake City, helping to build the Fifteenth Ward school-house, and to excavate for the temple, whose corner stone he saw laid and dedicated. In October, 1853, he moved to Lehi, where he has since led a busy and industrious life. For a time he followed farming, taking the Fotheringham farm on shares, later becoming the owner of this and several other valuable pieces of real estate. In connection with his brother Thomas he founded the mercantile firm of T. and W. Taylor, which conducted the first store in Lehi. During the latter years of his life, he engaged in the dairying business.

In 1853, he married Nannie Stranding, who was born in Layton, Lancashire, England, July 24, 1826, being the daughter of James and Mary Halliwell Stranding; and four years later he married Charlotte E. Leggett, a daughter of Conrad and Louisa Leggett, who was born October 9, 1837, in Ohio, and who was the mother of five children. In May, 1855, he was a member of the White Mountain expedition and from the spring of 1869 to the fall of 1870, was absent upon a mission to England, where he labored as traveling elder in the Manchester conference, and afterward presided successively over that and the Leeds conference. He returned home on account of ill health. He was secretary of the Lehi Dramatic Association, the pioneer dramatic organization, and one of the leading players. He was at one time a member of the City Council and also connected with the local military organization. Although he preferred a quiet life and was never much of a public man, yet he was one of the staunch and sturdy men of the community, ever ready to help in every worth cause.

Charlotte E. L. Taylor died February 20, 1909.

Nannie S. Taylor died June 15, 1913.

Wm. W. Taylor died November 17, 1907.

SAMUEL R. TAYLOR.

Samuel Rogers Taylor, son of James Taylor and Ann Rogers, was born August 11, 1840 in Oldham, Lancashire, England. When eight years of age, he, with his parents, left England and came to this country. The winter of 1848 he lived in New Orleans and in the spring of 1849, he moved to St. Louis where he lived until 1851. At that time they moved to Paduca, Kentucky. After two years they returned to St. Louis.

Early in the spring of 1853, he and his parents started for Utah, arriving in Salt Lake early in September, shortly afterwards he came to Lehi, where he has since made his home.

During 1855 and 1856, he helped build the old Meeting House.

On November 1, 1861, he married Martha Ann Fox. They were one of the first three couples from Lehi to be married in the Endowment House in Salt Lake City.

In 1866, he was called to Sanpete County, where he served about 60 days in the Black Hawk War.

He has served in nearly every public office, having been elected first as captain of police in 1871. From 1879 to 1880 he was alderman; 1881, 1882, 1885, 1886 was city councilor; 1889, 1890 he was Mayor; 1898, 1899, 1902, 1903 he was again a member of the Council.

In addition to these he served two terms as Justice of the Peace; and one term as deputy assessor. He was a charter member of the Lehi Brass Band, also the old Enough Band, being a member of these organizations for about 20 years.

He followed the blacksmith trade for many years until his health became impaired after which he engaged in farming. He died September 1, 1911.

MARTHA A. F. TAYLOR.

Martha Ann Fox, wife of Samuel Rogers Taylor, was born in Sheffield, Yorkshire, England, July 11, 1844, and was the daughter of Isaac W. and Margaret Ann Slinn Fox. She became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints July 11, 1853, at the age of nine years. During the years 1857, 1858, and 1859, she lived with her parents in Scotland, where her father was president of the Scotch Mission.

On May 1, 1860, with her parents, she emigrated to Utah, crossing the plains with ox teams. They arrived in Salt Lake City, October 6, 1860, and a week later they moved to Lehi, where they have since resided.

On November 1 1861, she married Samuel R. Taylor in the Endowment House, Salt Lake City. She has been an active worker in many lines. With her husband she labored in the first Old Folks Committee for many years. She has been prominent in political activities and took a leading part in many public festivities. At present she is a member of the presidency of the Relief Society of the First Ward.

She has raised a large and respectable family. The names of her children are: Samuel, James, Ebenezer, William, Isaac, Thomas, Alfred, Margaret, Robert, Charles Slinn, Birdie (Mrs. Thomas R. Cutler, Jr.) Ira, Leon, Ethel (Mrs. Douglas Scally), and Herbert.

DANIEL S. THOMAS.

Daniel Stillwell Thomas was born March 17, 1805, in Sumner County, Tennessee, and died June 27, 1878. His wife, Martha Pane Jones Thomas, was born February 20, 1808, in Sumner County, Tennessee, and died September 5, 1885. They were living in Calaway County, Kentucky, when Wilford Woodruff went on his first mission, holding the office of priest, and they were among his first converts.

They emigrated to Missouri in 1837, lived one year, built a house, and raised crops, when the Saints were driven from Missouri. They then had five children. They were among the early settlers of Nauvoo and there built a house and lived, and chiefly worked on the temple, their oldest son, Morgan, learning the stone cutting business there, commencing on the foundation and working on the Corinthian caps, which were on the tops of the pillars. They were among the last driven from Nauvoo in February, 1846. That summer they lived in Iowa and then moved to Winter Quarters for the winter. When the Church left Winter Quarters they moved to Honey Creek, Iowa.

In the summer of 1849, they crossed the plains to Utah, lived in Salt Lake City until 1856, then moved to Lehi where they lived until their death.

Father Thomas served the public as school trustee, and built the first Lehi school house, the Thurman Building. He was president of the high priests quorum. He was a great worker and took a full share in fencing the first fields and making the first water sections.

Mother Thomas was counselor to Sister Coleman Evans, first president of the Relief Society, and an active worker in that body. She was a great weaver and clothed her family well in their home-made cloth.

The children of Daniel Stillwell Thomas and Martha Pane Thomas are:

Morgan Milican Thomas,

Matilda Ann Thomas; married Israel Evans.

Malinda Stillwell Thomas; married Alexander Loveridge.

Isaac Thomas,

Emma Smith Thomas; married John Woodhouse.

Joseph Alma Thomas; married Mary Ellen Lawrence.

Daniel White Thomas; married Mary Ashton.

Martha Jane Thomas; married Newal Brown.

Sarah Phylinda Thomas; married Arthur Stewart.

John Jones Thomas; married Myra Clark.

GEORGE W. THURMAN.

George William Thurman, son of William Thomas Thurman and Mary Margaret Brown Thurman, was born August 11, 1843, in Larue County, Kentucky. His father died when he was eight years of age. He was the oldest of four children, three boys and one girl. He spent his boyhood in Kentucky, working on the farm during the summer and attending the public schools during the winter.

In the spring of 1860, during the agitation that finally culminated in the Civil War, he was a member of the Kentucky Home Guard, organized for the purpose of protecting the citizens of the community. In 1862, when General Bragg, followed by General Buell, made his famous raid through the state, he was called upon to carry a dispatch from Buell to Nelson at Louisville, a distance of seventy miles. Although about twenty miles of the distance he was traveling with Bragg's soldiers, he was not apprehended.

From 1863 to 1864, he attended the high school in Hardin County. In March, 1864, he started in company with several young men overland for California. He reached Salt Lake City during the summer and remained there a short time working for Bishop Hunter. From there he went to Nevada and worked for Len Wines on the overland stage lines. Sometime in 1865, he was transferred to Fairfield in Cedar Valley, Utah. He became acquainted in Cedar Fort and obtained a position as teacher in the schools there.

In 1866 he married Catherine Rodeback. That same year he went to San Pete as a soldier in the Black Hawk War. In 1868, and 1869, he taught school in Lehi. In the spring of 1869, he went to Kentucky and brought his mother and her family out to Utah. The same autumn he was again employed in school teaching in Cedar Fort. He returned to Lehi in the summer of 1870, and taught school until December 24, 1871. On that date he was shot by a ruffian while he was preparing a Christmas tree for his school and his death occurred the same day.

LUKE TITCOMB.

Luke Titcomb, a pioneer of 1852, was a native of Donnington, Berkshire, England, born March 3, 1832, a son of William and Mary Atkins Titcomb.

The father and mother joined the Mormon Church very soon after the introduction of the gospel into England and with their family emigrated to America in 1841, locating in Nauvoo, Illinois, passing through the persecutions and drivings of those days in common with the rest of the Saints. They crossed the plains in 1849, in Ezra T. Benson's company, arriving in Salt Lake City on the 31st of October.

The next three years were spent in Cottonwood and in 1852 the family moved to Lehi, where Luke has since resided. His parents soon moved back to Salt Lake City. The father died soon after, but the mother lived to a ripe old age. On January 26, 1854, Luke married Lydia Jane Tanner, a capable woman and a member of a well known and very numerous family in Utah. They have raised a very large family and have passed through all the trying scenes of early days in Lehi.

Mr. Titcomb was one of the builders of the fort wall in 1854; worked on the Meeting House in 1855; and was a member of the company of infantry sent to the scene of action in the Echo Canyon War in 1857, being the cook for the company of ten of which William Clark was captain.

To support his family, he has been a tiller of the soil and for a number of years he was janitor of the old Meeting House. His wife was a kind, generous, woman, ever ready to help those in distress. She was the mother of fourteen children. She died October 31, 1897; Luke Titcomb died November 24, 1913.

The following children grew up to maturity:

Mary Jane, (Mrs. Thomas Gray); Joseph L., Rebecca (Mrs.

Thomas Jones); Mahonri, Ruth (Mrs. John Jackson); Naomi S. (Mrs. Thomas Powers); Eunice, (Mrs. Lott Russon, Jr.); Helen E. (Mrs. Heber C. Comer); Preston; Florence.

THOMAS F. TRANE.

"I was born February 4, 1846, in Lemvig, Jutland, Denmark, my father's name being Andreas Peter Trane and my mother's was Margrethe Nielson. When six years of age, I was nearly drowned in a pond, but managed to crawl out. I lived with my grandmother until I was eight years of age, when I went to my father in Copenhagen, going all the way from Aalberg in the steamer alone. I was baptized March 17, 1858, by Elder Lars Matthiasen, and confirmed the following day by Niels Wilhelmssen.

"When fourteen years of age, I started for Utah with Carl Wideberg. I left Copenhagen May 2, 1860; crossed the Atlantic in the sailing vessel "William Tapscott;" drove an ox team across the plains in Captain Nephi Johnson's company; and arrived in Salt Lake City October 5, 1860, coming to Lehi October 12, 1860, where I resided for fifty two years.

"The first two summers in Lehi, I herded sheep and went to school about four weeks each winter. In the summer of 1862, which is known as the high water year, I was washing sheep in Utah Lake near Pelican Point when Hyrum, the son of Bishop Evans, was drowned. I was sent to Lehi with the news, and I ran all the way from the Point to Jordan Ferry, two miles north of the bridge, which was under water, procured a horse at Terrey's and met the Bishop between American Fork and Pleasant Grove. We immediately returned, but the body of Hyrum Evans was never found.

"In the summer of 1864, I hauled freight out west on Brigham Young's contract with Ben Eldredge and the Wells Fargo Stage Line. April 28, 1866, I went back after the church immigration, driving four yoke of oxen to the Missouri river and back to Utah, reaching Salt Lake City, September 17, 1866. I brought a family from Calcutta in my wagon, the woman being a Hindoo of high caste. She was a lovely woman, but could hardly walk, as her feet had been pinched after the manner of the Chinese. She could not stand the climate and died three weeks after reaching Utah.

"In the summer of 1857, I was called to Sanpete to protect the settlers from the Indians who were on the warpath under Chief Black Hawk. I served about a month on this expedition. After forty years, I received a medal for services rendered. On the 8th of December, 1867, I started for San Pedro, California, with a ten horse team and two wagons after freight which was brought down the coast in small schooners. On the way down we left grain enough in a lone house at Las Vegas to last us back to the settlements. We arrived at San Bernardino January 17, 1868, and after crossing the deserts of Arizona and Nevada, I thought the San Bernardino valley was paradise itself. We went down to Los Angeles, a city at that time of 2500 inhabitants, half of whom were Mexicans and Spaniards. There were only two or three ranches between San Bernardino and Los Angeles and one ranch from the latter place to San Pedro. We left San Pedro March 12, and arrived in Lehi May 16, 1868.

"I started right off for Fort Laramie and worked on the railroad which was coming west as fast as men and money could push it. I stayed until Christmas, working as far west as Echo and Weber canyons. I came home January 25, and was married to Eliza Howes in March, 1869. I went back to work on the railroad at Promontory and was there when the golden spike was driven by Senator Stanford of California. The camp at the Promontory was composed of the roughest men I have ever seen.

"I went up Bingham Canyon and worked for awhile at one of the first placer mines in the canyon. In 1871, I tended stage stock at the Half Way house for Gilmore and Salsbury, and in July of that year commenced to work for Bishop Evans as a clerk in the Lehi Union Exchange, continuing until December 15, 1879, when I started out as traveling salesman and introduced the Studebaker wagons. My territory covered Utah, parts of Idaho, Arizona, and Wyoming. In 1882, with Augustus Powell I started a small mercantile business near the Denver & Rio Grande depot in Lehi, which I sold in 1894, on account of the Teasdale failure in Salt Lake City. I next clerked for the People's Co-operative Institution for a few years and on April 7, 1896, was ordained a seventy and sent on a mission to California by way of Portland, Oregon. I labored in San Francisco, Sacramento, Los Angeles, and San Diego, returning home in September, 1897. During the last few years, I have been traveling salesman for the knitting factory in Lehi and in 1912 moved to American Fork."

Mr. Trane has led a very active life; has been a member of the City Council several times; a member of the School Board; and one of the first officers of the Young Men's Mutual Association in 1875. He has traveled much in the west; was present at the World's Fair at Chicago and St. Louis; and altogether has been a progressive, industrious, and useful citizen.

He has four daughters living: Jean C. (Mrs. William Chipman), Haydee (Mrs. William Thornton), Lulu M. (Mrs. Dr. H. E. Robinson), and Lexia M. (Mrs. Lawrence Briggs.)

ELIZA M. TRANE.

Eliza Maria Howes Trane, daughter of Henry and Eliza Howes, was born May 30, 1849, in Norwich, Norfolk, England. She emigrated to Utah, leaving England in January, 1853, with her father, mother, grandmother and a little sister of whom the last named was buried on the plains. She came in the sailing vessel "Ellen Maria," landed in New Orleans and proceeded up the river to Keokuk.

She crossed the plains with an ox team in Claudius Spencer's company, arriving in Salt Lake City in October, 1853, being nine months on the way. She lived in Salt Lake City for one year, moved to Lehi where her father, who was a bricklayer, helped to build the Meeting House and took an active part in the building up of Lehi. Being a man of means, he also assisted in bringing others to Utah.

Sister Trane had a brother and sister born under very trying circumstances; it was during the grasshopper war, when money could not buy a comfort on earth, as it was not here.

She attended the school taught by Mrs. Bassett and later taught by Charles D. Evans. As women and girls in those days worked in the fields, she took her part, hauling and stacking hay and grain, digging potatoes and hauling sage brush for fuel. Furthermore, she worked many days killing grasshoppers; spun and colored yarn for her own dresses and performed other work of this kind.

She is the mother of 8 children, 2 boys and 6 girls and at the present writing is the grandmother of 13 grandchildren. She was a teacher in the Relief Society for 12 years before moving to American Fork.

MICHAEL VAUGHAN.

Michael Vaughan, a son of William Vaughan, was born October 11, 1823, in the parish of Dinister, Monmouthshire, Wales, and was a coal miner by occupation. He was baptized a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Blana, June 11, 1850, and on April 16, 1854, was married to Jane Witchell, a daughter of William Witchell, at Hanover church. She died at Lehi January 25, 1893.

In 1858, he emigrated to Utah, his wife following three years later. In 1859, he located in

MICHAEL VAUGHAN.

Lehi and for several years was employed by Bishop Evans, but it was not long before he secured some land and commenced farming for himself. His principal occupation during the remainder of his life was tilling the soil. For eighteen years he was a dealer in coal, his stand being located near the D. & R. G. depot and for a number of years he was agent for farm machinery.

Mr. Vaughan was an earnest church worker and during his entire sojourn in Lehi was a faithful and efficient member of the choir and was seldom absent from his place among the basses. For many years he was a devoted Sunday School worker and block teacher; for a number of years presided over the priests quorum and in this position won the love and respect of the young men of the organization.

Her parents being members of the Mormon Church, she was baptized when eight years of age and emigrated to Utah in 1862, crossing the plains in Homer Duncan's company, coming direct to Lehi where she had a sister living. To this union were born nine children, three of whom died in infancy; the others are: Mariah Brain (Mrs. Mark Austin), Michael Thomas, (deceased), William Henry, Emily Jane (deceased), George Isaac, and Eleazer (deceased.) Mr. Vaughan died February 21, 1893.

JANE M. VAUGHN.

On May 6, 1863, he married Jane Mariah Brain, a daughter of Thomas and Mariah Brain who was born May 1, 1841, in Bambury, Oxfordshire, England.

GEORGE WEBB.

The subject of this sketch, George Webb, was born at Studham, Bedfordshire, England, May 6, 1839. He is the third son of William Webb and Emma Stokes Webb. His early life was spent on a farm and working in a flour mill. In the year 1856, he joined the Mormon Church. In March, 1861, he was called on a mission by Elias Blackburn and assigned to labor in the Norwich conference, where he worked for 3 years and 3 months. In 1864, he married Julia Cushing.

On June 3, with his father's family, he left England for Utah, sailing on the ship "Hudson." They were six weeks on the sea. On the plains his wife died. They arrived in Salt Lake City November 2, of the same year.

After staying there a few days they came to Lehi where he has resided ever since.

On May 30, 1865, he married Mary Ann Ward. While living in Lehi he has followed several occupations; running flour mills; working in American Fork canyon; farming; running the Lehi Banner, of which he was one of the promoters and finally editor and owner.

He has held the following offices: attorney for Lehi City; alderman; precinct justice; mayor; member of the legislature; delegate to two constitutional conventions; school trustee for 19 years; Utah County commissioner; president Lehi Irrigation Company 10 years; and director Utah Banking Company. At the present time, he is vice president of the People's Co-operative Institution and justice for Lehi City. He has also held the following positions in the Mormon Church: Assistant Superintendent of Sunday School; Assistant Superintendent Utah Stake Sunday school; one of the presidents of the 127th quorum of Seventy. His life has been a busy one and he has always stood for the building up of Lehi.

MARY ANN W. WEBB.

Mary Ann Ward Webb, daughter of Robert and Isabella Watford Ward, was born at Walpole, St. Peter's, Norfolk,

England, October 24, 1840, and joined the Mormon Church in November, 1851. Her early life was spent on the farm with her parents. When she was twenty-one, she went to London, where she lived for three years. On June 3, 1864, she and her sister left London for Utah, sailing on the ship, "Hudson," which landed in New York on July 20. From there they sailed up the Hudson River to Albany, and came thence by rail to the Missouri River. They left the river on August 12, crossing the plains in Captain Snow's company, walking much of the way. They arrived in Salt Lake City on November 3. She lived there until May 30, 1865, when she married George Webb and moved to Lehi, where she has lived ever since.

She is the mother of nine children, seven of whom are living. She has been a very active worker in religious and secular affairs and during a busy life has filled the following positions: member of Lehi choir for twenty years, president of Primary, Sunday School teacher for thirty years, counselor in Primary Association, Relief Society teacher, and first president of Lehi branch of the Woman's Suffrage Association. At present she is stake board missionary in the Relief Society. Besides her public work she has done a great deal of work among the sick in her neighborhood, always being ready to help in time of need.

The names of her children are: Walter L., Bernard G., Arthur F., Laura (Mrs. F. Salzner), Angie (Mrs. C. L. Warnick), Maud (Mrs. Jos. Glover), and Dulcie (Mrs. J. L. Francom).

JOHN STOKES WEBB.

John Stokes Webb, who was the son of William Webb, and Emma Stokes, was born in Whipsnade, Bedford, England, on the 20th day of November, 1831. He was engaged as a farm laborer until the time of leaving his native land. His father's family did not belong to any denomination and when in 1847, elders of the Church came to Studham, his mother and sister became converted to the gospel. His father was very bitter toward the elders and made many threats against them, but was finally persuaded to go and hear them, and was in due time converted and baptized. John was baptized on the 17th day of April, 1848, and soon after was ordained and sent out as a traveling elder.

He was married to Hannah Grace on February 18, 1854, in Studham and, in company with his wife, left his home on March 10, 1854, for Liverpool, where they were detained for nearly a month and then set sail on the steamship "Marshfield" in company with 366 other Saints under the direction of William Taylor, on April 8, 1854. After a long and tiresome journey they arrived in Salt Lake City in the fall of 1854. He was engaged to work for President Brigham Young for one year, coming to Lehi in the fall of 1855. His family lived for the following five years in a dug-out on the west side of what is now Block 18, Plat "A," Lehi City Survey of building lots, where his three oldest children were born. Food and clothing being very scarce, they endured many hardships in the early history of Lehi. He followed the occupation of farming and was quite successful in this line. He was also a director and general water master in the Lehi Irrigation Company.

Mr. Webb was a block teacher and a Sunday School worker for a great many years and held the office of a seventy at the time of his death.

John Stokes Webb was a strong Democrat, and was a great student of history, being familiar with the names of all the Presidents and leading Senators of the United States. He was the father of nine children, a quiet, unassuming man, and respected by all. He died January 27, 1899.

HANNAH GRACE WEBB.

Hannah Grace Webb, who was the daughter of John Grace and Sarah Mathews, was born in Wipsnade, Bedfordshire, England on the 9th day of May 1831. She, with other members of her father's family, were among the first to receive the gospel in Bedfordshire and she was baptized on April 19, 1846, in Whipsnade, England. She learned the art of braiding in her girlhood and followed this occupation until her marriage.

HANNAH GRACE WEBB.

selling the braid to the great straw hat factories at Luton, England. She was married to John S. Webb February 18, 1854, in Studham, England, and became the mother of nine children; five sons and four daughters, their names being: Sarah Emma Webb, (who became the wife of Wm. F. Gurney, she being now deceased), John William Webb; George Grace Webb, Hannah Elizabeth Webb, (now Mrs. John Bone), Harriet Jane Webb, (now Mrs. Samuel A. Smith), Rachel Ann Webb, (now Mrs. Edward Southwick), all residing at Lehi, Utah; and Oren James, Edwin David; and Wilsie Stokes, all of whom died in Lehi before marriage.

She passed through many trying ordeals in the early history of Lehi, but was always cheerful and faithful to every trust and passed away Sunday, April 24, 1904, at the age of 72 years, 11 months, and 14 days.

WILLIAM AND HARRIET WEBB.

William Webb was born August 6, 1843, in the town of Studham, England. His father's name was William Webb and that of his mother Emma Stokes Webb. Harriet Webb, wife of William Webb, was born June 29, 1841, in Bedfordshire, England. Her father's name was John Grace and her mother's name Sarah Mathews Grace.

WILLIAM AND HARRIET WEBB.

William and Harriet were married May 9, 1864, and left London June 2 of the same year, forsaking relatives, friends, and a good home to come to Utah for the sake of their religion. They crossed the ocean in one of the old time sailing vessels, the "Hudson," which was six weeks making the trip. They came across the plains with ox teams in 1864, William Webb driving one of the teams all the way. The wagons were loaded so heavily with freight that his good wife was compelled to walk nearly the whole distance. Their arrival in Lehi dated November 4, 1864, and they have resided here ever since.

A family of twelve children was born to this couple, ten boys and two girls. They have always been faithful members of the Mormon Church.

ROBERT JOHN WHIPPLE.

Robert John Whipple was born in Salt Lake City November 13, 1869, and is a descendant of old New England stock. His father, Nelson Wheeler Whipple, was born July 11, 1818, in Sanford, Broom County, New York, and belongs to the same family as William Whipple, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. He came to Utah in 1851. His mother, Susan Gay Whipple, was born June 13, 1841, in Dekalb, Kemper County, Mississippi, and came to Utah in 1850. She died September 29, 1911.

Until he was 16 years of age, Robert John attended school in the Nineteenth Ward Meeting-house during the winter and in the summer worked with his father in Big Cottonwood Canyon running a saw mill. His father died July 5, 1887, when for a number of years he worked at the carpenter trade and contracting. In 1892 he came to Lehi to work on the sugar factory, and was married to Susie Winn June 24, 1896. He labored as block teacher in the ward and as assistant to the bishop in the priest quorum from 1898 to 1903, as second assistant in the Sunday school in 1902, as second counselor in the presidency of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association from 1900 to 1903, and as president of the Y. M. M. I. A. in 1903. When the Lehi Ward was divided, he was selected as First Counselor to Andrew Fjeld in the Bishopric of the Lehi First Ward, which position he still holds. In 1910 and 1911 he served as a member of the City Council.

Mr. Whipple is one of Lehi's progressive citizens, deeply interested in the growth and welfare of the community.

SUSIE WINN WHIPPLE.

Susie Winn Whipple, daughter of William Henry Winn and Martha Evans Winn, was born in Lehi February 10, 1874. She was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints at the age of 8 years. During girlhood she took an active part in the social, religious, and political affairs of the town. She was graduated from the district school with the first class receiving diplomas of graduation in 1892, and then took a special Sunday School and Mutual course in the B. Y. Academy.

She served as secretary in the Y. L. M. I. A. for two years and was for a number of years secretary of the Democratic party. She also acted as secretary of the Woman's Suffrage Association, with M. M. Gaddie as its president. She assisted in passing a petition to the State Legislature asking for woman's franchise, which was granted. She was a delegate to the first state convention of the Democratic party in 1896, held in Salt Lake City. She was married, June 24, 1896, to R. J. Whipple. She is the mother of six children, as follows: Ora, Winnie Leath, Essie June, Byron John,

Mildred, and Miriam, the latter two being twins.

IRA J. WILLES.

Ira Jones Willes, son of Eleazar and Achsah Jones Willes, was born January 21, 1812, in New York. Ira joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in its early history. He volunteered and was enlisted as a private in Company B of the Mormon Battalion on July 13, 1846, and was successful in making the long, perilous journey to California. After his arrival from the march to California he was married at Salt Lake City, May 13, 1849, to Malissa Lott Smith, a young widow of the Prophet Joseph Smith. They moved to Lehi, purchased a farm, and became actively engaged in farming. This he made his principal business and became an incessant worker as a pioneer.

He was killed while crossing Dry Creek, by a load of wood overturning and burying him in the ice, together with his 9-year-old son, Cornelius.

MALISSA LOTT SMITH WILLES.

Malissa Lott Smith Willes, daughter of Cornelius P. and Permelia Darrow Lott, was born January 9, 1824, in Luzerne County, Pennsylvania. Her parents were born in New York and were staunch members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Malissa was baptized into the Church at the age of 14 years.

She was married to the Prophet Joseph Smith September 20, 1843, by Hyrum Smith, at Nauvoo. At this time she was 19 years and 9 months of age. She lived with the Prophet until his death, which occurred nine months after their marriage.

MALISSA L. S. WILLES.

Malissa crossed the plains with her parents one year following the arrival of the pioneers in Utah. She was married to Ira Jones Willes May 13, 1849, after his return from the Mormon Battalion. She was the mother of seven children, as follows: Ira Pratt (deceased), Cornelius John (deceased), Achsah Permelia (deceased), Polly Malissa (Mrs. Wm. W. Clark), Lyman Benjamin, Stephen Eleazar, and Sarah Amanela (Mrs. Albert K. Mulliner).

She died July 13, 1898.

W. S. S. WILLES.

William Sidney S. Willes, son of Eleazar and Achsah Jones Willes, the sixth child of a family of seven children, five sons and two daughters, was born in Jefferson County, New York, March 18, 1819. His ancestors in the direct line emigrated from England to New England prior to the Revolutionary War. He and his brother, Ira, were the only ones of his father's family who joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

They were with the Mormons when the call was made upon the Church for a battalion of men to go and fight in the war with Mexico. They volunteered and were mustered as privates in Company B of the Mormon Battalion and made the long and perilous journey overland to California.

Arriving in California, Sidney, as he was commonly called, secured work at Sutter's Mill at the time that gold was first found there. Later, he dug gold at the Mormon Island with the Mormon boys. A great deal has been said among his friends to the effect that he was actually the first discoverer of gold, instead of James W. Marshal. The facts as related by him to his wife, and by her to the writer of this sketch, are as follows:

He found some particles of yellow metal and suspected their true character, but decided to say nothing until he could verify his suspicions, thinking he would put them to the test after his day's work was ended. In the meantime Marshal had also found some of the same metal and confided his belief that it was gold to Henry W. Bigler and others, and thus the great discovery was made known to the world. Being urged, at different times, by his friends to press his claim to the honor of being the first discoverer of gold in California, he invariably answered that he did not care for the honor.

He was married April 23, 1852, to Alzina L. Lott, daughter of Cornelius P. and Permelia Darrow Lott, in Lehi, Brigham Young performing the ceremony. They established their home in Lehi, where were born to them nine children, two sons and seven daughters.

Their house was the first one in Lehi with a board floor. With the assistance of a man whom he hired, he sawed the lumber with a pit saw, first taking off a slab which he used for the roof, next, a board for the floor, the balance of the log was used in the construction of the walls with the sawed side inside.

March 10, 1855, he was commissioned, under the hand of Governor Brigham Young, captain of Company A, Lehi Post, of Utah Military district of the Nauvoo Legion and of Utah Militia, having been elected to this office May 11, 1854.

On the organization of the 68th quorum of seventy, November 28, 1862, he was appointed one of its presidents. April 13, 1863, he was called upon a mission to England and assigned to labor in the Norwich district; he was absent nearly three years.

December 21, 1866, he was elected Major of the Second Regiment, First Brigade, Second Division, Nauvoo Legion, Utah Militia. This commission as such was issued by Governor Durkee March 27, 1868.

In the fall of 1866 he was sent out to assist the immigrants and was captain of a train of ox teams which arrived in Salt Lake City November 29 of that year.

He participated in the various Indian wars of the Territory except the Black Hawk War, being absent in England during the greater part of this war. He took part in the Echo Canyon War, 1857, and was captain of a company which left Lehi to go to the relief of settlers at Salmon River. He brought the first bees to Lehi, consisting of three hives, one for himself and one each for two other men. He was several times elected to the City Council of Lehi. Although his opportunities for an education were meagre he was an ardent supporter of education.

Sidney Willes was a man well adapted to pioneer a new country, because he was able to turn his hand to almost any line of work, being an excellent gunsmith, carpenter, machinist, etc. In fact, he was what is generally called a natural born genius.

He surveyed the Spring Creek Ditch from the old mill pond to the lower field and, not having a spirit level he made one out of a piece of wood with a groove cut in the top which he filled with water. This incident shows his aptitude in contriving things to meet an emergency. He made jewelry for his daughters from the gold which he brought from California. He could repair any kind of machine from a clock to a steam engine. He fulfilled the admonition "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it well."

He was noted for his kindness of heart, cheerfulness, generosity, bravery and coolness in times of great danger. These qualities won for him the respect and love of all who knew him. He was of a modest, retiring disposition, never caring for prominence or position among men; yet his strict integrity, mature wisdom, and large experience placed him in the front ranks among his associates.

In the winter of 1870 and 1871, while working as sawyer at a mill in American Fork Canyon, he was caught in the saw, which resulted in injuries from which he died February 3, 1871, cutting short a useful career in the fifty-second year of his age.

ALZINA LUCINDA WILLES.

Alzina Lucinda Willes, the wife of Wm. S. S. Willes, was born in Tunckhannock, Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, March 4, 1834. She was the daughter of Cornelius P. and Permelia Darrow Lott.

Her father's family joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in 1838, moving first to Ohio and thence to Nauvoo, Illinois, where as a girl Sister Willes associated almost daily with the Prophet Joseph Smith. On account of her lively disposition and her ability to catch the Prophet's horse when no one else could do so, she became a special favorite of the Smith family.

She passed through the persecutions of Nauvoo and in 1848 crossed the plains, driving a team composed of two cows and two oxen the entire distance of 1,500 miles, arriving in Salt Lake Valley September 24, 1848.

In 1851 she, with her mother

and family, moved to Lehi and located on the shore of Utah Lake, where on April 23, 1852, she was married to William Sidney Willes by President Brigham Young, who was at that time passing through Lehi on a tour of the territory south.

When in 1852 the scattered settlers surrounding Lehi were called to move together for protection against the Indians, Brother and Sister Willes moved into the town, where she has since resided.

In 1871 death deprived her of her husband, leaving her with the responsibility of a large family of young children. Over this family she exercised the influence of a loving mother and bravely assumed the arduous duties of a father as well.

She was the mother of nine children, two boys and seven girls. Two of the girls died in infancy, the other children are as follows: Mary Jane (Mrs. Robert Gilchrist), William Sidney, John Smith, Celestia (Mrs. George P. Schow), Achsah Permelia (Mrs. Janus Schow), Abigail (deceased), Florence (Mrs. George N. Child, deceased).

Sister Willes possessed a warm heart and her life was full of service. She died August 19, 1910.

JOHN WILLIAM WING.

The Wing family landed in Boston in June, 1632, being descendants of the Reverend John Wing, a noted divine of England.

John William Wing, son of Matthias and Elizabeth Chinoweth Wing, was born May 25, 1845, at Newbrough, Pike County, Illinois. In 1862, in company with an uncle, Dr. Joseph Smith Wing, and an elder brother, Samuel Joseph Wing, John Wing started westward for the gathering place of the Latter-day Saints, having joined the Church the same year. With Louis Bruntson's independent company Mr. Wing landed in Salt Lake City August 29, 1862, and moved the following September to Lehi.

JOHN WILLIAM WING.

Mr. Wing's life in Utah has been an active one. The year following his arrival, he answered a call to join Peter Nebeker's company to go to Winter Quarters for Church immigration. The following four years he made four trips to the East for goods, making in all eleven trips across the plains by team. He was also active in freighting in Utah and the neighboring states, making two trips to Austin, Nevada, and two trips to Montana.

In the early activities of the first settlers Mr. Wing performed an active part. He knew what it was to make the roads; to build the bridges; to clear the sage; and to direct the mountain rions of the noted Black Hawk.

Mr. Wing married Martha Goates October 11, 1868, moving directly to Heber City, becoming one of the prominent settlers for the following fifteen years, at the close of which time he moved to Lehi, making his home here up to the present time.

Martha Goates Wing was born in Cambridge, England, June 12, 1848, emigrating to Utah in 1852. She is the third child of William and Susan Larkin Goates.

JOHN WILLIAM WING, JR.

John William Wing, Jr., is the son of John W. Wing, Sen., and Martha Goates Wing. He was born in Lehi, Utah, July 28, 1870. For fifteen years he assisted upon his father's farm in Heber, Utah. During his early life he developed an unusual ability in handling responsibilities and places of trust. Those who knew him never hesitated in leaving their greatest risks with him and in some cases sent for his assistance. From the time he was 15 to the present he has made his home in Lehi, Utah.

In the development of his community he has always taken a broad view. The needs of the people with him were always greater than self. This is illustrated during the eighteen years he conducted a livery and transfer business by bringing into the stream to the patches of grain growing upon the thirsty soil; to build and to occupy the log hut; to place himself in defense of his home and neighbors against the intruding white man or the savage Indian. Nor was his defense confined to self or neighbors, as he served valiantly in the war against the fearless war-worthy enterprise were involved in considerable difficulty, but the greatest satisfaction came to Mr. Wing in the knowledge of bettering the conditions of his neighbors and friends. In the breeding of pure bred horses, Mr. Wing is one of the pioneers.

Mr. Wing's strong personality, his great desire to please and serve the needs of those whom he meets gave to him unusual success for two years as a traveling salesman and later four years (his present occupation) as special representative of the Beneficial Life Insurance Company. His friends are numbered throughout Utah, Idaho, and Canada.

Mr. Wing is a strong adherent of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. During his boyhood he was a member of the various Church organizations acting for two years in the capacity of president of the Y. M.

MRS. J. W. WING, JR.

M. I. Association. He was set apart January 31, 1905, for a mission to England, returning January 29, 1907. During this period of two years he labored in the Liverpool Conference. For seven years he was a member of the presidency of the 68th quorum of seventies, and acted in this capacity until he was called to the position of counselor to Bishop James H. Gardner of the Second Ward of Lehi, June 22, 1913.

Mr. Wing married Rachel Evans September 7, 1898. To this marriage have been born one son and three daughters.

Rachel Evans Wing is the daughter of Bishop David Evans and Margaret Christina Holm Evans. She was born in Lehi April 25, 1874. Seldom are people united in marriage when each perform so admirably the duties of their calling.

WILLIAM H. WINN.

William Henry Winn, son of John Winn and Christiana Finch Winn, was born in the State of Pennsylvania, Luzerne County, township of Greenfield, June 30, 1833. He emigrated to Missouri in 1837, and was driven to Illinois in the Mormon expulsion of 1838. He was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the year 1842 at Nauvoo, Illinois. He emigrated to Utah in 1855. He was married to Martha Evans, daughter of Bishop David Evans and Barbara Ann Ewell Evans, October 20, 1859.

William H. Winn was an energetic worker in both the business and the religious affairs of the town and did much to improve its general interests. He was mayor of Lehi City three terms and later represented Utah County in the Legislature. He accepted a call to labor as a missionary, leaving his home November 1, 1874, for the state of New York, where he filled an honorable mission. He accepted a second call to the mission field in October, 1879, laboring in the state of Texas until he was released on account of ill health. He served as captain in the Black Hawk Indian war. He served as counselor to Bishop David Evans eleven years, and later to Bishop Thomas R. Cutler for five years, which position he held at the time of his demise.

He was taken suddenly with appendicitis and died at his home in Lehi April 26, 1884, at the age of 51 years, 9 months, and 26 days.

As a citizen he was cautious, discreet and yet progressive. As a man he was honest and upright in his dealings, strictly temperate in his habits, and firm in his convictions.

JOHN WOODHOUSE.

John Woodhouse, son of Charles and Ann Long Woodhouse, was born July 21, 1830, at Wickle Street, four miles north of Doncaster, Yorkshire, England. Both his father and grandfather had been tailors by trade so John took up this work when he had left school at the age of thirteen, learning the fundamental rules of reading, writing and arithmetic. When he was eighteen he joined the Methodist Church, but forsook that denomination shortly afterwards to become a Latter-day Saint, his family soon following him.

January 6, 1851, found the Woodhouse family in Liverpool on their way to Utah. Landing at New Orleans after two months' voyage, they proceeded at once to Saint Louis and after a year's stay there, continued on to Council Bluffs.

By dint of much effort a wagon was secured in which not only the members of the family but several other passengers crossed the plains—altogether seventeen passengers to one wagon. September 10, 1852, saw the company safely in Salt Lake.

Hearing of the contemplated erection of a sugar factory in Provo, and hoping thereby to obtain employment, John moved to that place, but was disappointed because the factory never materialized. The succeeding months were spent in Spanish Fork, Nephi and finally in Iron County. From here he made various trips to the surrounding country, including New Mexico and the White Mountains. Woodhouse's services were in demand at this time as surveyor for city lots and ditches. From Iron County he next moved to Beaver City, where he served as bishop's clerk. In 1862, he made a trip to the Missouri to assist the Church immigration.

In March, 1864, Woodhouse came from Beaver to Lehi in company with Daniel S. Thomas, whose daughter he had married. After a number of years he was called to go on a mission to England, leaving home September 9, 1874. After two years in Great Britain he returned home, reaching Lehi, June 11, 1876.

During his residence in Lehi.

Mr. Woodhouse has filled the following public offices: alderman, three terms; councilor, two terms; justice of the peace, one term; assessor for Lehi City; deputy county assessor and collector, two terms; county justice of the peace, four terms. He has been associated with the Lehi Irrigation Company since its organization, being one of the original incorporators, in fact.

In addition to his public work, John Woodhouse has rendered invaluable assistance to his fellow-citizens in countless other ways. His great versatility has enabled him to act at different times as doctor, merchant, tailor, lawyer, engineer, and lecturer. Added to this, his remarkable memory has made it possible for him to collect and retain an immense fund of information which he has been willing always to use for the education and assistance of his fellows. Today at the ripe old age of seventy-nine, his ability has not dimmed in the least and his countless friends wish yet to benefit by many more years of his friendship.

JOHN WORLTON.

John Worlton, son of James T. and Emma Martin Worlton, was born September 14, 1846, in Bath Sommershire, England. He came to Utah with his father's family when he was a small lad and lived the first year in Salt Lake City. From here the family moved to East Weber, where they resided until the "Move," when they joined with other settlers in 1858, and moved to Spanish Fork. The next migration of the family was to Camp Floyd, where after a short stay, they moved in 1860, to Lehi, which became their permanent home.

As a boy, John entered with spirit into the work and play which was characteristic of those pioneer days in Utah. He spent several years of his early life hauling produce from Utah into various places in Nevada and Montana. He made two trips by ox team from Utah to the Missouri river for the purpose of bringing European immigrants to Utah. When the Black Hawk war and other Indian troubles threatened the peace and safety of the people, he enlisted and served his country with honor.

In 1869, he married Elizabeth Bone, by whom he had three children. His wife died in 1874, and on February 20, 1877, he married Anna Bronelson by whom he had eleven children.

One of his prominent characteristics was his interest in education. His own being neglected, he resolved to make every effort to educate his children. His labors in this direction met with unusual success.

He was actively engaged in the religious activities of the community and worked unceasingly for the general good.

Perhaps the work of his life which was most characteristic of the man was his persistent activity in the relief of suffering. In case of contagious diseases, of deaths where help was to be had, he often risked his life in extending the helping hand. His life exemplified the admonition of the Savior, "What sœever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

He died December 3, 1906.

ANNA B. WORLTON.

Anna Bronelson Worlton, wife of John Worlton, was born in Aarhus, Denmark, March 16, 1859, and spent the early part of her life in her native land. She joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and with her mother came to Utah in 1876, and settled in Lehi.

ANNA BRONELSON WORLTON.

She was married to John Worlton, February 20, 1877, and became the mother of eleven children, nine of whom survive her.

She died April 20, 1902.

Her life was one of personal sacrifice for the good of others. She entered with enthusiasm into the activities of various organizations, both civic and religious, for the general social welfare, and worked unceasingly to make of her home an ideal environment for her children.

JOHN ZIMMERMAN.

Another old pioneer and one who resided in Lehi fifty-six years, was John Zimmerman. He was born October 3, 1820, in Washington county, Maryland. His parents were George Gottlob and Julian Hoke Zimmerman.

His father was an accomplished man, being a school teacher. He taught English, French, and German as well as several other subjects. When he was two years of age, his parents moved to Franklin county, Pennsylvania and in 1843, to the northern part of Illinois, and three years later to Garden Grove.

John Zimmerman received a fair education, and, having an aptitude for farming, he followed that occupation at the expiration of his school days. His parents joined the Mormon Church and naturally went to Utah. John followed a year later.

He was married September 21, 1850, to Harriet Laura Lamb, and became the father of eleven children, namely: George Erasmus, Harriet Abigail (Mrs. H. M. Royle), Louisa Emmeline, (Mrs.

A. J. Evans), Margaret, (Mrs. E. A. Bushman), Polly Ann, (Mrs. David Losee), Elizabeth, (Mrs. Isaac Fox); Julia Ann, (Mrs. George F. Southwick), John, Charles, Wilson, Suel, and Robert.

Mr. Zimmerman left Garden Grove, Iowa, June 1, 1852. He traveled along the Platte River under the command of Captain James C. Snow. His cousin and father-in-law died from cholera while journeying to Utah, otherwise the journey was uneventful. He reached Utah during the last week in September, 1852, and located in Lehi. Being one of the first settlers, he helped build the first fort. He became a member of the Church in 1856, after having associated with the Saints for ten years.

He held many ecclesiastical, military, and public offices. In 1857, he was ordained a member of the Forty-fourth quorum of seventy, and was later a member of the high priests' quorum. He was also ward teacher from 1868 to 1894. From 1864 to 1868, he was adjutant of infantry in the Utah Militia, and from 1868, was adjutant of cavalry until it was disbanded. In public life he figured as an alderman, 1861-1862, and councilor for Lehi, 1871-1872. He was constable at Garden Grove, Iowa, from 1842-1852. He was also one of the first police in Lehi, and from 1856-1862 he was supervisor of roads. He aided in the construction of the first telegraph line in Utah and received one share of stock, value $100, for his services. He contributed his services very largely in assisting the country in general by erecting mills, helping in the construction of the first railroad in Utah, besides furnishing teams upon various occasions to bring immigrants to Utah. He was one of the first subscribers to the stock of the Z. C. M. I. also to the first co-operative store in Lehi, and was treasurer of that institution several years.

Mrs. Zimmerman died February 22, 1891, while Mr. Zimmerman lived to be eighty-eight years of age. He died November 13, 1908.
